I hesitate to commit myself in print to the suggestion that Madison might have been confused--most unusual with Madison. Nor can I exclude the possibility that I might have been confused. Would it suit your purpose to say that Madison "may have been uncertain as to what was being achieved?" That would make sense after a "confused" debate. You may quote that if you feel it supports. I am preoccupied right now with the last stages (I hope) of getting my Federalist through the press and I fear that I can't take this further. Good fortune with your work!
