RESEARCH INTERESTS AND TEACHING STATEMENT

My research interests include: race and the law; civil rights/black power legal history; law and popular culture; difference and power; law and punishment; racial capitalism, Marxist theory, and black radicalism; social movements and cultural resistance; incarceration, criminalization, law and social control.

My approach to teaching comes out of a commitment to education as praxis for freedom. I draw from three related traditions of praxis. First, holistic legal pedagogy, which recognizes that there is a direct connection between how students feel and how they learn, underscoring the necessity of dealing with students' complex lives in order to create environments where creativity, compassion, and critical thought can flourish. Secondly, adult transformative education in which people seeking to make life changes (e.g., addiction, disease status, political empowerment) require a delicate balance between leadership and freedom, revealing how student development comes only by living this tension through open dialogue. Finally, I am instructed in my teaching by the praxis of liberation movements, or the praxis of freedom, which finds that social change can never occur when teachers pretend to be the exclusive subjects of knowledge and power, thus reducing students to mere objects; rather, growth happens when all who are involved help each other mutually, sharing the effort to understand the reality they seek to transform.
