Extended Techniques for the 21st-Century Pianist: Playing on, Inside, and with the Piano

The performance of Contemporary music sometimes requires the use of extended techniques. In these unconventional approaches to playing the piano, the twenty-first century musician is asked, for example, to create clusters with their forearms, use the pedals in creative ways, sing/speak in conjunction with playing, or play inside the piano, such as strumming the strings, muting, and finding harmonics. Through explanation and demonstration, this presentation aims to make the innovative concepts and techniques of Contemporary music accessible for both teachers and students. Pianists are able to experience a new way of music making through this adventurous channel—aurally, physically, and intellectually.

Presenter: Monica Kang

Everything Starts with a Goal: Practicing Techniques

A GOAL is what motivates us in life, what propels us to do things, to improve, to achieve. Years of practicing can be wasted because of the emphasis on quantity and not on quality. This presentation will focus on how teachers can help their students set and follow practicing goals. Examples will be demonstrated for creative practicing techniques with everyday traditional and non-traditional exercises to help students developing proficiency in technique, sound production, and memory.

Presenter: Oscar Macchioni

How to add "music composition for all age levels of students" to your piano studio curriculum

Timothy Brown will discuss creative ways of introducing music composition and orchestration to your piano students as a "natural extension" of their piano study. Various techniques will be explored to add an understanding of how to "inspire" children to enjoy the exciting process of creating music. Ensemble music, orchestration techniques, and developing the ability of students to develop their own "compositional Voice" will all be discussed during the session.

Presenter: Timothy Brown

The Solo Piano Works of Leonard Bernstein

This is a lecture demonstration of music by one of our foremost composers, including excerpts from Anniversaries, Piano Sonata, Touches, and additional little known but fascinating works. Bernstein was a true Renaissance man of music—conductor, pianist, composer, teacher. In preparation for his upcoming centenary, Andrew Cooperstock has extensively researched and recorded Bernstein's complete piano works, which show a number of significant influences, from jazz to Judaism to serious to popular to Americana. The music is appropriate for the younger student to the concert performer.

Presenter: Andrew Cooperstock

So you want to compose? Fun and effective strategies for teaching composition to students of all ages

In this workshop, Jennifer Eklund, known in the piano pedagogy field for writing engaging pop-style music that keeps students sparked in their lessons, will guide you through her step-by-step process of teaching students how to compose. Her unique, template-based approach makes it simple for teachers to work with students to construct compositions that are well-balanced, memorable, and fun! The beauty of the system lies in its flexible scalability allowing teachers to use the same model with students of all ages and ability levels. Topics will include instructing students on improvisation as a launching point for new compositions, writing memorable melodies, pop chording terminology, and notation software options.

Chopin's Markings: the Keys to Inflection and Rubato

Pianists and teachers face the challenge of crafting expressive, flexible, yet well-proportioned interpretations of Chopin's music. The composer's own articulation and expressive markings provide the best blueprint for cultivating a deep connection to his music, including how to inflect vocal phrasing and where to invest more expressive energy and intention. Examples will be drawn from Nocturnes, Waltzes, Ballades, Polonaises, Mazurkas, Preludes, and Etudes.

Presenter: Fred Karpoff

Reunion A (1st Floor)2-3 PM

Understanding the Mind's Role in Natural, Healthy Movement, and Musical Interpretation

Many musicians are unaware that the conscious mind is not designed to coordinate advanced motor skills, especially at a rapid rate of speed. When we struggle with technique, it is often the result of our conscious minds, or "egos," stubbornly attempting to micromanage movements. By cultivating a feeling of "letting go," we can learn to allow natural processes to take charge—we relinquish control to gain far greater control. At first this may feel disorienting or even scary, but over time it will yield tremendous results in students of all levels.

Conference of Texas Collegiate Chapters: Application Of The Stanislavski's Acting System To The Preparation And Performance Of Classical Piano Repertoire

Konstantin Stanislavski (1863-1938) revolutionized the way actors prepare for theatrical roles through the creation of new system of actor training. The fundamental principles underlying this system have significant relevance to the preparation of Classical piano repertoire for performance and may offer classical pianists useful perspectives concerning expressive intent, tone production and physicality.

Adding Notes to Bach Johann Sebastian Bach, one of the most creative musicians ever to walk the earth, was constantly composing and improvising, as well as arranging, re-arranging, transcribing, and re-contextualizing his and others' music. This lecture/demonstration explores such interactive textual creativity in Bach's keyboard works through the concepts of newly added lines, chorales, continuo parts, lead-ins, varied reprises, original codettas, and cadenzas illustrated through several Inventions, Preludes, and movements from Partitas. Adding notes to Bach doesn't have to be limited to an occasional trill or mordent! Since Bach was prolific and daring, shouldn't modern keyboardists have the same spirit of adventure?

From the composer: Travel is strangely calming for me. I love exploring new places and revisiting the familiar. These three short miniatures are not so much musical depictions of travel as they are reflections on the emotions surrounding travel, from the excitement of being in a new city to the persistent desire to return home to loved ones.
