Assessing a Sherlock Holmes Collection

Christy Allen, Furman University
Elementary, My Dear Cameron: Assessing a Sherlock Holmes Collection at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill
Presented by Christy E. Allen, Digital State Documents Librarian
State Library of North Carolina, Documents Branch

1. Problem
The Mary Shore Cameron Sherlock Holmes Collection at UNC-Chapel Hill has the following problems:
- The precise holdings of the collection are unknown.
- The strengths/weaknesses of the collection have never been assessed.
- Future developers of the collection would not know which titles to acquire within the collection’s scope.

2. Solution
Create a shelf list including all items in the Cameron Collection.
Identify patterns of holdings to determine strengths and weaknesses of the collection.
Use Sherlock Holmes bibliographies and other UNC Sherlock Holmes collections to identify areas for collection development.
Create desiderata list for future development of collection.

3. Process
Transcribe original shelf list
Create enhanced shelf list
Compare shelf list to physical holdings
Clarify shelf list based on examination of holdings
Identify holdings patterns within collection
Identify prominent authors, publishers, and subjects in collection
Conduct research
Use bibliographic resources to identify specific titles matching holdings patterns
Create desiderata list
Document assessment process
Create bibliographic list of materials based on research
Assign call numbers to each item

4. Project Details
- Collection contains over 5,000 individual items
- Collection is not actively developed
- Complete assessment takes over 400 work hours to complete
- Extensive bibliographic resources required for the successful completion of project

5. Results
Creation of the publication “An Assessment of the Mary Shore Cameron Sherlock Holmes Collection at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill”:
- Contains the 148 page shelf list
- Contains the 33 page desiderata list
- Contains broad overview of the collection’s holdings with strengths and weaknesses clearly outlined
- Contains detailed description of the assessment process
