Helping L.A.'s Foster Kids Grow Up

Byrne Thomas, University of Pennsylvania
Dennis P Culhane, University of Pennsylvania
Stephen Metraux, University of the Sciences in Philadelphia

Available at: http://works.bepress.com/dennis_culhane/115/
The mayor and others have big plans, but some residents feel left out.

JIM NEWTON

City Council Presi dent Don Gil Cedillo and Councilman Kevin De Leon held a news conference Wednesday to announce that they have received a $2.1 million grant from the federal government to help fund a neighborhood center on the west side. The city will use the money to build a community center on a site that was previously a parking lot. The center will include a health clinic, a library, and a community garden. The center is expected to open in late 2012.

The mayor's plan to build a neighborhood center in the neighborhood is met with mixed reactions. Some residents are excited about the project, while others are concerned about the loss of parking space.

The project is part of the mayor's plan to revitalize the area and create jobs. The city will use the money to build a community center on a site that was previously a parking lot. The center will include a health clinic, a library, and a community garden. The center is expected to open in late 2012.

The mayor's plan to build a neighborhood center in the neighborhood is met with mixed reactions. Some residents are excited about the project, while others are concerned about the loss of parking space.