Teaching

Courses personally created, Wright State University

Marxism, as it Happened. An honors-course exploration of the economic thinking of Karl Marx and the Marxists who came after him, as well as an exploration of the grim historical record of communism as actually practiced.

Adam Smith. An investigation of the ideas, including their historical resonance, found in An Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations and The Theory of Moral Sentiments. What was groundbreaking about Smith's thinking? What do we think today he got right and wrong?

Business and Society. A seminar for freshman students, which takes a partly social-science, partly humanities approach to the conflicting views about the influence business and commerce have on society. Students read journalism, articles by social scientists, song lyrics, literature and judicial decisions as raw material for discussing these questions. The course number this class carries allows professors from a variety of departments to design a class on a theme that interests them, and to use it to introduce students to the world of ideas and to the university itself.

Economic and Financial Instability. An upper-division elective on the financial and technological sources of economic crashes, as well as of positive and negative economic instability generally. (Also taught at Soochow University, Taiwan)

Economics of State and Society. Part of the Wright State University general-education sequence introduced in spring, 2014. It is part of a course cluster with a companion course in the philosophy department, and covers the economics of government in the context of a liberal society.

Analysis of Global Economic Conditions (formerly International Business and the Global Economy). An MBA course that is a unique and comprehensive survey of the key features and implications of globalization. (Also taught at Soochow University, Taiwan, and the University of Applied Science, Jena, Germany.)

Law and Economics. A standard upper-division course in law and economics, with a few twists.

The Economics of Sports. Use of professional and collegiate sports to illustrate core theoretical concepts from labor economics, industrial organization, microeconomics, financial economics, law and economics, and international economics. Includes material generally not covered in sports-economics courses elsewhere, including issues in the law and economics of sports, sports and international-trade theory, and presentation, at the end of term, of latest published research from others.

The Economics of Diversity. Applying new developments in the economics of conflict as well as older insights from labor economics, public choice and elsewhere to understand how highly diverse societies function: discrimination and whether and why it happens, ethnoreligious conflict and cooperation, the economics of identity creation, the economics of immigration, the effects of globalization on cultural diversity. As far as I have been able to ascertain, this is the first (and still only) course on this theme anywhere in the world.

The Great Depression. A unique course on the economics and history of the Depression. Among the questions explored: Why did it begin? Why did it last so long? What was the relation between the Depression and enthusiasm for totalitarianism? Why did the U.S. fare worst? (Also taught at University of Applied Sciences, Jena, Germany)

Economic Life (survey course for non-majors)

Economic Life (Honors)

Microeconomic Principles

Macroeconomic Principles

Global Economic, Business, and Social Issues. Lower-division course, with teachers given flexibility on how to teach, as long as it involves these questions. I have students do readings from the media that involve economic ideas, and then engage in Socratic dialogue to understand and evaluate the claims of the readings.

University Service

Organized discussion group for business-college faculty on various aspects of teaching improvement, 2017- (ongoing).

Organization of numerous independent interdisciplinary book groups within WSU's general-education and, separately, business-college faculty.

Organization of "Liberty Lunch" discussion series (university-wide). For several years twice a term I led a discussion, primarily with students (although all in the university community were invited) on topics in political economy. Later these discussions migrated to the economics club. Subsequently and several years later, with external funding, organized a university-wide student reading group with no formal name but with a broader themes of social organization and freedom of expression.

Periodic faculty advisor to student Economics Club, and annual advisor to WSU badminton club.

Committee work: standard undergraduate curriculum committees (department-and college-level), Raj Soin College of Business faculty-governance committee (Faculty Executive Committee, FEC), university committee to select common freshmen text, university general-education committee, university first-year experience committee, university free-speech committee, university writing committee, undergraduate academic-programs committee, assorted hiring committees at both university and department level. Chair of RSCOB FEC, late fall 2013-spring, 2015. Was able in this role to work productively, I hope, with senior university leadership to oversee college improvement and manage such conflicts in the college as arose.

Member of ad hoc group to improve assessment at Wright State University, under direction of university's senior vice president for curriculum and instruction (2005-2008).

Spring and Summer, 2002: Participant in curriculum development in association with United States Department of Education Title VIA Grant, Undergraduate International Studies and Foreign Language Program: "Encountering the Old and New Worlds: Enhancing Student and Faculty Involvement in European and Western Hemispheric Studies."

Media Relations

Comments have appeared in or on AP, Reuters, Orange County Register, Christian Science Monitor, New York Times, National Public Radio, Newsweek International, Bloomberg Radio, WCBS-AM (New York City), Slate, Chicago Daily Herald, Forbes.com, Veja (Brazilian national newsweekly), Dayton Daily News, Richmond Times-Dispatch, Dayton Business Weekly, several Dayton TV and radio stations. Research mentioned twice on widely read Marginal Revolution blog. My comments on several aspects of sports economics have frequently appeared in newspapers worldwide, and I have appeared on several major radio talk shows to talk about anti-corporate thought and activism.
