January 25, 2010

An Open Letter to the Citizens of Northwest Louisiana

Frederick J White, III
WASHINGTON — A politically anxious President Barack Obama on Sunday made fresh promises of economic progress that may be a long time coming as an administration official said the White House was prepared to unveil a new economic stimulus plan later this week.

In Illinois, Robert Blakey, a top aide to the president, said the administration was preparing to announce a “federal rescue package” on Thursday that would include $175 billion in emergency aid and $150 billion to shore up the banking system.

The administration was also considering a range of other measures that could be announced in the coming days.

On health care, White House spokesman Robert Gibbs said the administration was “willing to go to the mat” in the decision-making process, and that the White House was “prepared to make a decision on health care reform” if it was needed.

The White House was also considering a range of other measures, including a possible increase in the minimum wage and a boost in federal workers’ pay.

On the economy, the White House was preparing to announce a range of new measures, including a possible increase in the minimum wage and a boost in federal workers’ pay.

In Illinois, Robert Blakey, a top aide to the president, said the administration was preparing to announce a “federal rescue package” on Thursday that would include $175 billion in emergency aid and $150 billion to shore up the banking system.

The administration was also considering a range of other measures that could be announced in the coming days.

On health care, White House spokesman Robert Gibbs said the administration was “willing to go to the mat” in the decision-making process, and that the White House was “prepared to make a decision on health care reform” if it was needed.

The White House was also considering a range of other measures, including a possible increase in the minimum wage and a boost in federal workers’ pay.

On the economy, the White House was preparing to announce a range of new measures, including a possible increase in the minimum wage and a boost in federal workers’ pay.

In Illinois, Robert Blakey, a top aide to the president, said the administration was preparing to announce a “federal rescue package” on Thursday that would include $175 billion in emergency aid and $150 billion to shore up the banking system.

The administration was also considering a range of other measures that could be announced in the coming days.

On health care, White House spokesman Robert Gibbs said the administration was “willing to go to the mat” in the decision-making process, and that the White House was “prepared to make a decision on health care reform” if it was needed.

The White House was also considering a range of other measures, including a possible increase in the minimum wage and a boost in federal workers’ pay.

On the economy, the White House was preparing to announce a range of new measures, including a possible increase in the minimum wage and a boost in federal workers’ pay.

In Illinois, Robert Blakey, a top aide to the president, said the administration was preparing to announce a “federal rescue package” on Thursday that would include $175 billion in emergency aid and $150 billion to shore up the banking system.

The administration was also considering a range of other measures that could be announced in the coming days.

On health care, White House spokesman Robert Gibbs said the administration was “willing to go to the mat” in the decision-making process, and that the White House was “prepared to make a decision on health care reform” if it was needed.

The White House was also considering a range of other measures, including a possible increase in the minimum wage and a boost in federal workers’ pay.

On the economy, the White House was preparing to announce a range of new measures, including a possible increase in the minimum wage and a boost in federal workers’ pay.

In Illinois, Robert Blakey, a top aide to the president, said the administration was preparing to announce a “federal rescue package” on Thursday that would include $175 billion in emergency aid and $150 billion to shore up the banking system.

The administration was also considering a range of other measures that could be announced in the coming days.

On health care, White House spokesman Robert Gibbs said the administration was “willing to go to the mat” in the decision-making process, and that the White House was “prepared to make a decision on health care reform” if it was needed.

The White House was also considering a range of other measures, including a possible increase in the minimum wage and a boost in federal workers’ pay.

On the economy, the White House was preparing to announce a range of new measures, including a possible increase in the minimum wage and a boost in federal workers’ pay.

In Illinois, Robert Blakey, a top aide to the president, said the administration was preparing to announce a “federal rescue package” on Thursday that would include $175 billion in emergency aid and $150 billion to shore up the banking system.

The administration was also considering a range of other measures that could be announced in the coming days.

On health care, White House spokesman Robert Gibbs said the administration was “willing to go to the mat” in the decision-making process, and that the White House was “prepared to make a decision on health care reform” if it was needed.

The White House was also considering a range of other measures, including a possible increase in the minimum wage and a boost in federal workers’ pay.

On the economy, the White House was preparing to announce a range of new measures, including a possible increase in the minimum wage and a boost in federal workers’ pay.

In Illinois, Robert Blakey, a top aide to the president, said the administration was preparing to announce a “federal rescue package” on Thursday that would include $175 billion in emergency aid and $150 billion to shore up the banking system.

The administration was also considering a range of other measures that could be announced in the coming days.

On health care, White House spokesman Robert Gibbs said the administration was “willing to go to the mat” in the decision-making process, and that the White House was “prepared to make a decision on health care reform” if it was needed.

The White House was also considering a range of other measures, including a possible increase in the minimum wage and a boost in federal workers’ pay.

On the economy, the White House was preparing to announce a range of new measures, including a possible increase in the minimum wage and a boost in federal workers’ pay.

In Illinois, Robert Blakey, a top aide to the president, said the administration was preparing to announce a “federal rescue package” on Thursday that would include $175 billion in emergency aid and $150 billion to shore up the banking system.

The administration was also considering a range of other measures that could be announced in the coming days.

On health care, White House spokesman Robert Gibbs said the administration was “willing to go to the mat” in the decision-making process, and that the White House was “prepared to make a decision on health care reform” if it was needed.

The White House was also considering a range of other measures, including a possible increase in the minimum wage and a boost in federal workers’ pay.

On the economy, the White House was preparing to announce a range of new measures, including a possible increase in the minimum wage and a boost in federal workers’ pay.