RATIFICATION AS AN EXCEPTION TO THE § 1983 CAUSATION REQUIREMENT: PLAINTIFF'S OPPORTUNITY OR ILLUSION

George M. Weaver
RATIFICATION AS AN EXCEPTION TO THE § 1983 CAUSATION REQUIREMENT: PLAINTIFF'S OPPORTUNITY OR ILLUSION

© George M. Weaver

(June 2009)
TABLE OF CONTENTS

A. BACKGROUND AND HISTORY OF § 1983 LIABILITY
   1. NON-CAUSATION ELEMENTS
      1. Deprivation of a Federally Protected Right
      2. Action Under Color of State Law
      3. Conduct by a § 1983 “Person”
      4. Damages
   2. PROXIMATE CAUSATION ELEMENT
      1. Standard Causation Theories
         a. Participation
         b. Liability of a Supervisor for Direct Authorization
         c. Liability for Failure to Intervene
         d. Formal Policy
         e. Failure to Have Adequate Policy
         f. Informal Policy (Custom and Practice)
         g. Authorization by Training and Supervision Practices (a Policy Subset)
      2. Ratification
         a. Elements of Ratification under Restatements of Agency
         b. The Causation Hurdle in § 1983 Ratification Liability
         c. Case Study: Police Internal Affairs Reports
         d. The Converse of Ratification
   3. CONCLUSION

   1
   2
   3
   5
   6
   6
   9
   9
   11
   12
   12
   18 20
   25
   29
   33
   40
   41
   49
   50
Ratification has been recognized as a viable theory of 42 U.S.C. § 1983 liability but involves several unusual issues. It deserves attention because it is the only theory of § 1983 liability that appears to relax the strict requirement of proximate causation. The theory may however be like a mirage, pleasing to plaintiffs at a distance but offering little hope upon closer inspection.

A. BACKGROUND AND HISTORY OF § 1983 LIABILITY

Enacted in 1871 as the Ku Klux Klan Act, 42 U.S.C. § 1983 is the workhorse of civil rights statutes. The text of § 1983 provides in part:

Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress, except that in any action brought against a judicial officer for an act or omission taken in such officer's judicial capacity, injunctive relief shall not be granted unless a declaratory decree was violated or declaratory relief was unavailable.¹

The Supreme Court has explained that the purpose of § 1983, which was enacted in implementation of the Fourteenth Amendment, was to establish “the Federal Government as a guarantor of basic federal rights against state power.”²

Until Monroe v. Pape,³ the Act was dormant. In Monroe, the Supreme Court reversed the dismissal of a suit brought by a plaintiff whose home was ransacked by police officers. The plaintiff was arrested but released without being charged. Breaking new ground, the Court held that action “under color of law” as required by § 1983 could be shown even though the officers had acted in violation of state law.\(^4\) The Court also held that specific intent to deprive a person of a federal right is not required for § 1983 liability,\(^5\) and that a plaintiff need not first exhaust state judicial remedies before bringing suit under § 1983.\(^6\)

Other decisions after Monroe have also broadened the utility of § 1983 for plaintiffs. Importantly, the Supreme Court has held that cities and counties are “persons” that may be sued for damages under § 1983 and that they have no immunity from such suits.\(^7\) States, by contrast, may not, absent waiver, be sued for damages in federal court under § 1983. Moreover, states are not considered persons for § 1983 purposes.\(^8\)

B. NON-CAUSATION ELEMENTS

In order to recover on a § 1983 claim against any defendant (whether an entity, supervisor, or subordinate employee), the plaintiff must plead and prove a number of elements. Damages liability under § 1983 of an individual for his personal misconduct is fairly straightforward, but the liability of corporate entities (usually governmental units)\(^9\) and non-participating supervisors is subtle and complex. Liability against entities and supervisors has generally been imposed where the basic elements of § 1983 are met and either (1) the wrongdoing is directly authorized by the defendant supervisor or some policy-making agent of the defendant entity, or (2) the defendant supervisor or entity creates or enforces a policy that causes the wrongdoing.

\(^4\) Id. at 171-87.

\(^5\) Id. at 186-87.

\(^6\) Id. at 182-86.

1. DEPRIVATION OF A FEDERALLY PROTECTED RIGHT

Section 1983 creates no substantive rights, but rather provides a vehicle for an injured person to pursue money damages or other remedies for violations of federally-protected rights.\(^{10}\) “The first inquiry in any § 1983 suit . . . is whether the plaintiff has been deprived of a right ‘secured by the Constitution and laws’ [of the United States].”\(^{11}\)

\(^9\)A non-governmental entity is subject to liability under § 1983 only in the rare situation in which it can be said to have acted under color of state law. See Lugar v. Edmondson Oil Co., 457 U.S. 922 (1982) (holding that private business corporation acted under color of state law in using state prejudgment attachment procedures to seize property wrongfully).

\(^{11}\)Baker v. McCollan, 443 U.S. 137, 140 (1979); Collins v. City of Harker Heights, 503 U.S. 115, 119 (1992) (“Although [§ 1983] provides the citizen with an effective remedy against those abuses of state power that violate federal law, it does not provide a remedy for abuses that do not violate federal law.”); City of Los Angeles v. Heller, 475 U.S.796, 799 (1986) (per curiam) (“If a person has suffered no constitutional injury at the hands of the individual police officer, the fact that the departmental regulations might have authorized the use of constitutionally excessive force is quite beside the point.”); Hamilton by Hamilton v. Cannon, 80 F.3d 1525, 1528 (11th Cir. 1996) (“Before a person, county, or municipality can be held liable under section 1983, a plaintiff must establish that she suffered a constitutional deprivation.”).
Although § 1983 contains no state-of-mind requirement, negligence is not an adequate basis for any § 1983 claim. The Court has suggested that the deliberate indifference standard applies across the board to all constitutional violations alleged against a municipality. In some § 1983 cases, the state-of-mind requirement may be even more onerous for the plaintiff.

14City of Canton v. Harris, 489 U.S. 378, 389 n.8 (1989) (“The ‘deliberate indifference’ standard we adopt for § 1983 ‘failure to train’ claims does not turn upon the degree of fault (if any) that a plaintiff must show to make out an underlying claim of a constitutional violation.”). See also Gonzalez v. Yselta Indep. Sch. Dist., 996 F.2d 745, 759 (5th Cir. 1993) (observing, in a case involving the liability of a school district for the actions of a policy maker, that deliberate indifference “has apparently become the rule”).

15For example, in order to establish a violation of the Eighth Amendment for failing to protect one inmate from another inmate, a § 1983 plaintiff must show a heightened form of deliberate indifference. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 848 (1994) (plaintiff must also show that a state actor defendant subjectively knew of a “substantial risk of serious harm and disregard[ed] that risk by failing to take reasonable measures to abate it”); Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 105-06 (1976); LeMarca v. Turner, 995 F.2d 1526 (11th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1164 (1994). And a correctional officer cannot be held liable for excessive force against prison inmates unless he intends harm. Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 6, 11-12 (1992) (“[T]he question whether the measure taken inflicted unnecessary and wanton pain and suffering ultimately turns on ‘whether force was applied in a good faith effort to maintain or restore discipline or maliciously and sadistically for the very purpose of causing harm.’ ”); Whitley v. Albers, 475 U.S. 312, 320 (1986). The same is true for a police officer sued under § 1983 for actions during a high-speed pursuit. County of Sacramento v. Lewis, 523 U.S. 833, 854 (1997) (“high-speed chases with no intent to harm suspects physically or to worsen their legal plight do not give rise to liability under the Fourteenth Amendment, redressible by an action under § 1983”).

Equal protection claims, which have been held to require proof of intentional discrimination, provide another example. Pers. Adm’r of Mass. v. Feeny, 442 U.S. 256,
2. ACTION UNDER COLOR OF STATE LAW

In order for conduct to be state action it must be “made possible only because the wrongdoer is clothed with the authority of state law,” and it must be “chargeable to the State.” The Court has held that “the under-color-of-state-law element of § 1983 excludes from its reach merely private conduct, no matter how discriminatory or wrongful.” The Supreme Court has used several methods to determine whether conduct by private persons and entities qualifies as state action.

---

272 (1979) (“even if a neutral law has a disproportionately adverse effect upon a racial minority, it is unconstitutional under the Equal Protection Clause only if that impact can be traced to a discriminatory purpose”); Washington v. Davis, 426 U.S. 229, 240 (1976); Pearson v. Macon-Bibb County Hosp. Auth., 952 F.2d 1274, 1282 (11th Cir. 1992) (“An equal protection claim will prevail only upon a showing of intentional discrimination.”).

16 The Supreme Court has held that “conduct satisfying the state-action requirement of the Fourteenth Amendment satisfies the statutory requirement of action under color of state law.” Lugar v. Edmondson Oil Co., 457 U.S. 922, 935 n.18 (1982).

18 Lugar, 457 U.S. at 935 n.18 (1982). See also Morgan v. Tice, 862 F.2d 1495, 1499 (11th Cir. 1989).

20 See Brentwood Acad. v. Tenn. Secondary Sch. Athletic Ass’n, 531 U.S. 288, 295 (2001) (“[A] challenged activity may be state action when it results from the State's exercise of ‘coercive power,’ when the State provides ‘significant encouragement, either overt or covert,’ or when a private actor operates as a ‘willful participant in joint activity with the State or its agents.’ We have treated a nominally private entity as a state actor when it is controlled by an ‘agency of the State,’ when it has been delegated a public function by the State; when it is ‘entwined with governmental policies,’ or when government is ‘entwined in [its] management or control.’”) (cits. omitted); Sheldon Nahmod, 1 CIVIL RIGHTS AND CIVIL LIBERTIES LITIGATION THE LAW OF SECTION 1983, 2:4, at 2-13 (4th ed. 2008) (“State action exists (1) where the state and the private party or entity maintain a sufficiently interdependent or symbiotic relationship; (2) where the state requires, encourages, or is otherwise significantly involved in nominally private conduct; and (3) where the private person or entity exercises a traditional state function. On the
3. CONDUCT BY A § 1983 “PERSON”

A § 1983 person may be an individual, corporation, city, or county. But, as noted above, a state is not a person for § 1983 purposes.

4. DAMAGES

Just as in a tort case, a § 1983 plaintiff must prove compensatory damages (unless the plaintiff seeks only nominal damages, injunctive, or other non-pecuniary relief). These may include general damages for emotional harm. Damages are not, however, recoverable for the intrinsic value of a violated constitutional right. Punitives may be recovered against individuals for egregious misconduct. Punitives may not, however, be recovered against a municipality or governmental entity.

C. PROXIMATE CAUSATION ELEMENT

According to the statute, it must be shown that the defendant “subject[ed] or cause[d plaintiff] to be subjected” to a deprivation of some federally protected

---

One aspect of this causation element is “causation-in-fact.” The “but-for” test is often used to make this determination. In Mount Healthy City Bd. of Ed. v. Doyle, a public employee speech case, the Supreme Court adopted a variation of this test by requiring that a plaintiff establish that protected conduct was a ‘substantial factor’ or, to put in other words, that it was a ‘motivating factor’ in the deprivation of rights. The Court further elaborated the test by allowing the defendant to overcome the plaintiff’s evidence of causation through showing “by a preponderance of the evidence that it would have reached the same decision as to respondent’s re-employment even in the absence of the protected conduct.”

But it is not enough for a plaintiff to establish causation-in-fact or but-for causation. Proximate causation must also be shown. The Supreme Court has held that the statutory language of § 1983 does not allow liability against a municipality by respondeat superior or the mere fact that it employed a tortfeasor, which is a variety of causation-in-fact.

In Williams v. Bennett, the Eleventh Circuit held that a plaintiff “must prove that each individual defendant proximately caused the unconstitutional conditions in the prison.” The court also pointed out that under 42 U.S.C. § 1988 state law governs the definition of “proximate cause.”

Illustrating these principles, the Supreme Court held in Martinez v. California, that the California Parole Board could not be held liable under §1983 for the death of a 15-year-old girl who was killed by a parolee who had been released by the board five months earlier. The Court held that, even assuming the board knew or should have known that the release created such a danger, “appellants’ decedent’s death is too remote a consequence of the parole officers’ action to hold them responsible under the federal civil rights law.”

Some courts have held that a § 1983 plaintiff must meet a heightened pleading standard in alleging causation.

---

32 689 F.2d at 1389.
33 Id.
34 444 U.S. 277 (1980).
35 Id. at 280, 285.
36 Cottone v. Jenne, 326 F.3d 1352, 1362 & n.7 (11th Cir. 2003) (“The plaintiffs also do not allege any affirmative custom or policy implemented by the supervisory defendants that played a role in Cottone's death. Nor do they allege that the supervisors instructed D'Elia and Williams to commit constitutional violations. As a result, the amended complaint does not allege the causal connection required to impose supervisory liability against these defendants.”); id. at 1362 n.7 (“In examining the factual allegations in a complaint, we must keep in mind the heightened pleading requirements for civil rights cases, especially those involving qualified immunity.”) (cit. omitted), But see Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intelligence and Coordination Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 167-68 (1993) (holding that heightened pleading standard does not apply in § 1983 case, but not deciding whether the Court’s “qualified immunity jurisprudence would require a heightened pleading in cases involving individual government officials”); Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 1973 n.14 (2007); Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 212-14, 224 (2007) (“adopting different and more onerous pleading rules to deal with particular categories of cases should be done through established rulemaking procedures, and not on a case-by-case basis by the courts”); Hill v. McDonough, 547 U.S.
1. STANDARD CAUSATION THEORIES

In order to understand the role of ratification in §1983 liability, we must first appreciate standard causation theories.

a. Participation

The most obvious form of causation that can yield § 1983 liability is personal participation in a deprivation of federally-protected rights. This applies, of course, not only to a line-level employee but also to a supervisor who, for example, personally arrests a suspect without probable cause. The supervisor can be held liable just as a subordinate officer who does the same thing.37

Conspiracy and aiding-and-abetting are forms of personal participation and may include private actors.38 A conspiracy is an agreement or “understanding” to 37See generally Bryson v. Gonzales, 534 F.3d 1282, 1289 (10th Cir. 2008) (“Supervisors are not strictly liable for the torts of their underlings; instead, they are liable only when they ‘personally participated in the alleged violation.’ ”); Cottone v. Jenne, 326 F.3d 1352, 1360 (11th Cir. 2003) (“supervisory liability under § 1983 occurs either when the supervisor personally participates in the alleged unconstitutional conduct or when there is a causal connection between the actions of a supervising official and the alleged constitutional deprivation”) (cits. omitted); Hill v. DeKalb Reg’l Youth Det. Ctr., 40 F.3d 1176, 1192 (11th Cir. 1994) (“To recover individually from Lewis and Wilkinson, who were in supervisory or policymaking capacities, the Hills must show that they are liable through the ‘personal participation’ in the acts comprising the alleged constitutional violation or ‘the existence of a causal connection’ linking their actions with the violation”) (cit. omitted), overruled in part on other grounds, Hope v. Pelzer, 536 U.S. 730 (2002).

---

38See Rowe v. City of Fort Lauderdale, 279 F.3d 1271, 1289 (11th Cir. 2002); N.A.A.C.P. v. Hunt, 891 F.2d 1555, 1563 (11th Cir. 1990) (to establish § 1983 liability based on conspiracy, plaintiff must show that private party and governmental official “reached an understanding” to deny rights); Harvey v. Harvey, 949 F.2d 1127, 1133 (11th Cir. 1992); Halberstam v. Welch, 705 F.2d 472, 477-78, 483-84 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (non-§1983 case summarizing civil liability for conspiracy and aiding-and-abetting).
do an unlawful act.  But “[a]n express agreement among all the conspirators is not a necessary element of a civil conspiracy.”

Although the touchstone of § 1983 liability is personal participation, there are many other varieties of proximate causality. As the Eleventh Circuit has said, “Personal participation . . . is only one of several ways to establish the requisite causal connection.”

Courts have frequently faced the question of whether a municipality or a person in a supervisory position has proximately caused a deprivation of civil rights. The Supreme Court has stressed that in order for a supervisor or municipality not directly involved in a deprivation of rights to become liable under § 1983 there must be a clear causal connection between conduct of the supervisor or municipality and the deprivation. In finding that there was no such connection in Rizzo v. Goode, the Court said:

As the facts developed, there was no affirmative link between the occurrence of the various incidents of police misconduct and the adoption of any plan or policy by petitioners—express or otherwise—showing their authorization or approval of such misconduct.

Note that the Court clarified the required “affirmative link” by saying that it must

---

40 Lenard v. Argento, 699 F.2d 874, 882 (7th Cir. 1983).
41 Zatler v. Wainwright, 802 F.2d 397, 401 (11th Cir. 1986) (“Personal participation . . . is only one of several ways to establish the requisite causal connection.”). See also Sims v. Adams, 537 F.2d 829, 831 (5th Cir. 1976).
43 Id. at 371 (emphasis added).
amount to “authorization or approval.” Lower courts have been careful to insist on an “affirmative link” between the actions of a municipality or supervisor and a constitutional deprivation carried out by a subordinate. Importantly, the affirmative link must reflect the elements of the particular federally-protected right at issue.

b. Liability of a Supervisor for Direct Authorization

A supervisor who does not personally participate may nevertheless incur liability under § 1983 if he authorizes or approves of the conduct of a subordinate that deprives another of a civil right. He may expressly authorize it, as in the Fifth Circuit case Baskin v. Parker, in which the defendant sheriff “authorized the investigation and organized the search party” which deprived plaintiffs of constitutional rights. The Fifth Circuit has also said that a supervisor may be liable if “he directs, orders, participates in, or approves the acts.”

---

44 E.g., Anderson v. City of Atlanta, 778 F.2d 678, 685 (11th Cir. 1985) (“at a minimum, a plaintiff must demonstrate some affirmative link between the policy and the particular constitutional violation alleged”); Rock v. McCoy, 763 F.2d 394, 398 (10th Cir. 1985); Hays v. Jefferson County, 668 F.2d 869, 873-74 (6th Cir. 1982) (“a plaintiff must show that the official at least implicitly authorized, approved or knowingly acquiesced”); Lee v. Downs, 641 F.2d 1117, 1120 n.1 (4th Cir. 1981). As will be discussed shortly, a municipality “may only be held accountable if the deprivation was the result of municipal ‘custom or policy.’” City of Oklahoma City v. Tuttle, 471 U.S. at 817.

45 For example, mere negligence of an entity or supervisor could not provide the required affirmative link. If, for instance, the plaintiff asserts an Eighth Amendment violation, the affirmative link must amount to deliberate indifference. See Williams v. Bennett, 689 F.2d at 1380.

46 602 F.2d 1205 (5th Cir. 1979).

47 Id. at 1208.

48 Ford v. Byrd, 544 F.2d 194, 195 (5th Cir. 1976). See also Fogarty v. Gallegos, 523 F.3d 1147, 1163-64 (10th Cir. 2008); Howell v. Tanner, 650 F.2d 610, 615 (5th Cir.)
c. Liability for Failure to Intervene

Although a supervisor does not expressly direct the offending conduct, the required authorization or approval may be found if he stands by with knowledge of what is happening and refuses to intervene.\(^49\) It is apparent, however, that knowledge acquired by a supervisor after the offending conduct does not satisfy the causality requirement.\(^50\) A subordinate who has the opportunity but fails to intervene may also be held liable under §1983.\(^51\)

d. Formal Policy

It has been held that a supervisory official or a municipality may become liable for a deprivation of civil rights through the creation or execution of a policy.

\(^{1981}\), overruled in part on other grounds, Augustine v. Doe, 740 F.2d 322 (5th Cir. 1984); Reimer v. Short, 578 F.2d 621, 625 (5th Cir. 1978).

\(^{49}\)See Mercado v. City of Orlando, 407 F.3d 1152, 1158 (11th Cir. 2005); Cottone v. Jenne, 326 F.3d 1352, 1360 (11th Cir. 2003) ("the causal connection may be established . . . when facts support 'an inference that the supervisor directed the subordinates to act unlawfully or knew that the subordinates would act unlawfully and failed to stop them from doing so' ") (cits. omitted); McQurter v. City of Atlanta, 572 F. Supp. 1401, 1415-16 (N.D. Ga. 1983) ("supervisory officers had a duty to intervene in the excessive use of force against McQurter and failed to do so" and therefore "are directly liable for Duncan's excessive use of force"), overruled in part on other grounds, 486 U.S. 196 (1988).

\(^{50}\)Chestnut v. City of Quincy, 513 F.2d 91, 92 (5th Cir. 1975).

\(^{51}\)Grieveson v. Anderson, 538 F.3d 763, 778 (7th Cir. 2008) (officer who “watched the assault but did not intervene” could be held liable); Torres-Rivera v. O’Neill Cancel, 406 F.3d 43, 54 (1st Cir. 2005) (“A law enforcement officer has an affirmative duty to intercede on the behalf of a citizen whose constitutional rights are being violated in his presence by other officers.”) (cit. omitted); Smith v. Mensinger, 293 F.3d 641, 650 (3rd Cir. 2002) (“a corrections officer's failure to intervene in a beating can be the basis of liability for an Eighth Amendment violation under § 1983 if the corrections officer had a reasonable opportunity to intervene and simply refused to do so”); Richardson v. City of Indianapolis, 658 F.2d 494, 500 (7th Cir. 1981); Webb v. Hiykel, 713 F.2d 405, 408 (8th Cir. 1983).
Even though a supervisor or policymaker of a municipality is unaware of the conduct of his subordinates on a particular occasion, the supervisor and the municipality may be responsible for the subordinates’ conduct if they have authorized a policy that in some fashion causes the offending conduct.\footnote{52} But in order to impose liability in this manner, there must be an “authoriz[ed]” policy and conduct “pursuant to [that] policy.”\footnote{53}

In its landmark decision in Monell v. Dep’t of Soc. Servs.,\footnote{54} the Supreme Court held that a municipality may be held liable under § 1983 if “the action that is alleged to be unconstitutional implements or executes a policy statement, ordinance, regulation, or decision officially adopted and promulgated by that body’s officers.”\footnote{55} Rejecting respondeat superior liability, the Court explained:

> [T]he language of § 1983, read against the background of the same legislative history, compels the conclusion that Congress did not intend municipalities to be held liable unless action pursuant to official municipal policy of some nature caused a constitutional tort. In particular, we conclude that a municipality cannot be held liable solely because it employs a tort-feasor—or, in other words, a \footnote{52}See Hill v. DeKalb Reg’l Youth Det. Ctr., 40 F.3d 1176, 1192 (11th Cir. 1994) (“In addition to personally participating in acts causing constitutional deprivations, [supervisors and policymakers] Lewis and Wilkinson also could be liable to the Hills indirectly if they personally instigated or adopted a policy that violated Hill’s constitutional rights.”) (cit. omitted), overruled in part on other grounds, Hope v. Pelzer, 536 U.S. 730 (2002).

\footnote{53}Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95, 106 n.7 (1983). See also Rizzo, 423 U.S. at 371 (“As the facts developed, there was no \textit{affirmative link} between the occurrence of the various incidents of police misconduct and the adoption of any plan or policy by petitioners—express or otherwise—showing their \textit{authorization or approval} of such misconduct.”) (emphasis added).

\footnote{54}436 U.S. 658 (1978).

\footnote{55}Id. at 690.
municipality cannot be held liable under § 1983 on a respondeat superior theory.\textsuperscript{56}

Later the Court restated: “[I]t is when execution of a government's policy or custom, whether made by its lawmakers or by those whose edicts or acts may fairly be said to represent official policy, inflicts the injury that the government as an entity is responsible under § 1983.”\textsuperscript{57}

It is clear, then, that a municipality can be held responsible only for conduct which it authorizes by “official” policy. Since \textit{Monell}, the Court has reiterated this rule. In \textit{Tuttle}, the Court said: “\textit{Monell} teaches that the city may only be held accountable if the deprivation was the result of municipal ‘custom or policy.’ ”\textsuperscript{58}

Moreover, the “official policy must be ‘the moving force of the constitutional violation.’ ”\textsuperscript{59} To be the “moving force” there must be a clear connection between the policy and the violation.\textsuperscript{60}

The same standard has been applied to other non-participating defendants \textsuperscript{56}Id. at 691 (emphasis original).

\textsuperscript{57}Id. at 694.
\textsuperscript{60}See, e.g., \textit{Piotrowski v. City of Houston}, 237 F.3d 567, 581 (5th Cir. 2001) (even assuming that “acquiescence in police officers’ moonlighting” was a city policy, “evidence is nevertheless insufficient to establish that it was the moving force that caused” plaintiff to be shot by ex-boyfriend whose private investigator hired moonlighting police officers).
such as supervisory officials. In other words, a supervisory official who creates or implements an unconstitutional policy may incur liability for such actions on the same basis as a municipality.61

Several additional points should be made about the general nature of these policies. In order to support § 1983 liability, a policy must be culpable and deliberate.62 But it need not itself be unconstitutional.63 Although a number of early § 1983 decisions held that non-participating defendants could not be liable 61 See Cottone v. Jenne, 326 F.3d 1352, 1360 (11th Cir. 2003) (“the causal connection may be established when a supervisor’s ‘custom or policy . . . result[s] in deliberate indifference to constitutional rights’ ”) (cits. omitted); Baker v. Putnal, 75 F.3d 190, 199 (5th Cir. 1996) (“Supervisory officials may be held liable only if: (i) they affirmatively participate in acts that cause constitutional deprivation; or (ii) implement unconstitutional policies that causally result in plaintiff’s injury.”); McLaughlin v. City of LaGrange, 662 F.2d 1385, 1388 (11th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 979 (1982); Marchese v. Lucas, 758 F.2d 138, 186 (6th Cir. 1985) (all § 1983 “person[s]” may incur liability for deprivations pursuant to policy); Turpin v. Mailet, 619 F.2d 196, 201 n.3 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1016 (1980), overruled in part on other grounds, Leatherman v. Tarrant County, 507 U.S. 163 (1993).

62 See Garretson v. City of Madison Heights, 407 F.3d 789, 796 (6th Cir. 2005) (“‘policy of inaction ‘must reflect some degree of fault before it may be considered a policy upon which § 1983 liability may be based’ ”) (cit. omitted); Meade v. Grubbs, 841 F.2d 1512, 1528 (10th Cir. 1988) (“Unless a supervisor has established or utilized an unconstitutional policy or custom, a plaintiff must show that the supervisory defendant breached a duty imposed by state or local law which caused the constitutional violation.”); Owens v. City of Atlanta, 780 F.2d 1564, 1567 (11th Cir. 1986) (holding that in order to result in § 1983 liability, a policy must contain a “fault element”); Rizzo v. Goode, 423 U.S. 362, 373-77 (1976) (only “deliberate policies” can subject nonparticipating defendants to § 1983 liability); Farred v. Hicks, 915 F.2d 1530, 1532-33 (11th Cir. 1990).

63 See Board of County Comm’rs v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 420 (1997) (citing City of Canton v. Harris, 489 U.S. 378, 387 (1989) (“That the sheriff’s act did not itself command or require commission of a constitutional violation . . . is not dispositive under § 1983, for we have expressly rejected the contention that ‘only unconstitutional policies are actionable’ under § 1983, and have never suggested that liability under the statute is otherwise limited to policies that facially violate other federal law. The sheriff’s policy choice creating a substantial risk of a constitutional violation therefore could subject the county to liability under existing precedent.”)) for failing to adopt or enforce adequate policies, that position is no longer well supported. This point is discussed further below.

An offending policy may be formal or informal. The clearest examples of official policies are those formally adopted and promulgated. In Monell, for example, the offending policy required pregnant employees to take unpaid leave before any medical necessity. This official policy was formally adopted by the New York Department of Social Services and Board of Education.64

Official policies of this type may be made not only by lawmakers but also “by those whose edicts or acts may fairly be said to represent official policy.”65 In order for municipal liability to attach, “the decision-maker [must] possess[] final authority to establish municipal policy with respect to the action ordered.”66 And the Court has held that state law determines whether state or local government officials are policymakers.67 It is important to recognize that, unlike with respect 6436 U.S. at 660-661, 694-95. See also Holloman ex rel. Holloman v. Harland, 370 F.3d 1252, 1290-91 (11th Cir. 2004) (written memo from county school superintendent mandating student recitation of pledge of allegiance could support school board liability for the plaintiff’s “compelled-speech First Amendment claim” based on required reciting of pledge); Little v. City of North Miami, 805 F.2d 962, 967 (11th Cir. 1986) (city resolution censuring law professor for First Amendment protected expression could form basis for municipal liability).

65*Monell*, 436 U.S. at 694.

66*Pembaur*, 475 U.S. at 481 (plurality opinion).

67McMillian v. Monroe County, 520 U.S. 781, 784-86 (1997); Jett v. Dallas Independent School Dist., 491 U.S. 701, 737 (1989) (“[W]hether a particular official has “final policymaking authority” is a question of state law.’ ”). See also Miller v. Calhoun County, 408 F.3d 803, 813 (6th Cir. 2005); Riddick v. School Bd. of City of Portsmouth, 238 F.3d 518, 523 (4th Cir. 2000); Berdin v. Duggan, 701 F.2d 909, 913-14 (11th Cir. 1983); Rhode v. Denson, 776 F.2d 107, 108-09 (5th Cir. 1985) (a policymaking official has the “authority to define objectives and choose the means of achieving them”);
to an informal policy or custom, a single decision of a policymaker can subject both the policymaker and the entity to liability.\textsuperscript{68} Of course, to impose liability on this basis, “fault and causation” must also be proven.\textsuperscript{69}

Policies leading to § 1983 liability need not be written. For example, in Wanger v. Bonner,\textsuperscript{70} the sheriff of DeKalb County, Georgia was held liable under § 1983 on the basis of three unwritten policies that he had communicated to his deputies and that “caused . . . th[e] unconstitutional search” of a home late at night in an attempt to serve an arrest warrant for a misdemeanor traffic offense. The address on the warrant was erroneous: The person named in the warrant had never lived at the address. The three unwritten policies that were held to support liability against the sheriff were: (1) serving arrest warrants “on the midnight shift

\begin{flushright}
\textit{Wellington v. Daniels, 717 F.2d 932, 936-37 (4$^{th}$ Cir. 1983).}
\end{flushright}

\textsuperscript{68}\textit{Pembaur, 475 U.S. at 470 (plurality opinion) (“[I]t is plain that municipal liability may be imposed for a single decision by municipal policymakers under appropriate circumstances.”); Jett v. Dallas Indep. Sch. Dist., 491 U.S. 701, 736-37 (1989); City of St. Louis v. Praprotnik, 485 U.S. 112 (1988) (plurality opinion); Gelin v. Hous. Auth. of New Orleans, 456 F.3d 525, 527 (5$^{th}$ Cir. 2006); Cooper v. Dillon, 403 F.3d 1208, 12111-12, 1222-23 (11$^{th}$ Cir. 2005) (city of Key West, Florida held liable for single enforcement by police chief, who was final policymaking official, of unconstitutional state criminal statute forbidding disclosure by a participant of a pending police internal investigation; “we reject [Police Chief] Dillon’s argument that the single enforcement of the statute against Cooper could not constitute a ‘policy’ for § 1983 purposes”; “we find that the City of Key West, through the actions of Dillon, adopted a policy that caused the deprivation of Cooper's constitutional rights which rendered the municipality liable under § 1983”).

\textsuperscript{69}\textit{Bd. of County Comm’rs v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 405 (1997) (“To the extent that we have recognized a cause of action under § 1983 based on a single decision attributable to a municipality, we have done so only where the evidence that the municipality had acted and that the plaintiff had suffered a deprivation of federal rights also proved fault and causation.”).}

\textsuperscript{70}621 F.2d 675 (5$^{th}$ Cir. 1980).
. . . without regard to the nature of the offense charged”; (2) serving arrest warrants “without regard to . . . the likelihood that an address on the warrant would be incorrect”; and (3) “searching the premises whenever the person to be arrested could not be found.”

The existence and implementation of an effective policy forbidding unconstitutional conduct, although not a necessary part of an entity or supervisor’s defense, precludes, of course, liability against the entity or supervisor.

e. Failure to Have Adequate Policy

In Rizzo, the Court ruled that a mere “failure to act” by superiors is insufficient for § 1983 liability. But numerous more recent cases hold that entities and supervisors may indeed be liable for failing, after adequate warning, to enact or enforce policies that could have prevented unconstitutional harm.

---

71 Id. at 679-83. See also Pembaur, 475 U.S. at 473-74; Garretson v. City of Madison Heights, 407 F.3d 789, 796 (6th Cir. 2005).

73 423 U.S. at 376. See also Cygnar v. City of Chicago, 865 F.2d 827, 847 (7th Cir. 1989) (official with final policymaking authority must actually have participated in the constitutional wrongdoing; failure by policymaking official to take corrective action is insufficient in and of itself to show § 1983 liability); Batista v. Rodriguez, 702 F.2d 393, 399 (2d Cir. 1983) (“A causal link cannot be inferred from municipal inaction.”); Wanger v. Bonner, 621 F.2d 675, 680 (5th Cir. 1980) (the “failure to adopt policies to prevent constitutional violations” is “not . . . an adequate basis for liability under § 1983”).

74 See, e.g., Johnson v. Blaukat, 453 F.3d 1108, 1113-14 (8th Cir. 2006) (“Supervisors can be individually liable if they directly participate in a constitutional violation or if they failed to supervise and train officers.”); Garretson v. City of Madison Heights, 407 F.3d 789, 796 (6th Cir. 2005) (in order to prove “unwritten custom of not providing medical attention to pre-trial detainees prior to arraignment—a policy or custom of inaction” plaintiff must show, inter alia, “a failure to act amounting to an official policy of inaction”); Gibson v. County Of Washoe, 290 F.3d 1175, 1186 (9th Cir. 2002) (“a plaintiff can allege that through its omissions the municipality is responsible for a constitutional violation committed by one of its employees”; “there is also evidence from which a jury could properly conclude that the County's failures to act caused its employee to violate Gibson's rights, and that those failures amounted to deliberate indifference”) (emphasis original); Fairley v. Luman, 281 F.3d 913, 917-18 (9th Cir. 2002) (inadequate “warrant procedures” that led to 12-day detention of twin brother of person named in warrants supported liability against city; “the policy was one of inaction: wait and see if someone complains”); Worrell v. Henry, 219 F.3d 1197, 1214 (10th Cir. 2000) (“A plaintiff may show that ‘an affirmative link exists between the constitutional deprivation and either the supervisor’s personal participation, his exercise of control or direction, or his failure to supervise.’”) (cit. omitted); Vineyard v. County of Murray, 990 F.2d 1207 (11th Cir. 1993) (liability of county for excessive force upheld where “the Sheriff’s Department had inadequate procedures for recording and following up complaints against individual officers’’); Oviatt v. Pearce, 954 F.2d 1470, 1474, 1477-79 (9th Cir. 1992) (“a local governmental body may be liable if it has a policy of inaction and such inaction amounts to a failure to protect constitutional rights”; deciding city could be liable under § 1983 because it failed to implement internal procedures for tracking inmate arraignments); Rhyne v. Henderson County, 973 F.2d 386, 392 (5th Cir. 1992) (“A failure to adopt a policy can be deliberately indifferent when it is obvious that the likely consequences of not adopting a policy will be a deprivation of constitutional rights.”); Larez v. City of Los Angeles, 946 F.2d 630, 645 (9th Cir. 1991) (“‘Policy or custom may be inferred if, after [constitutional violations], . . . officials took no steps to reprimand or discharge the[ir] subordinates, or if they otherwise failed to admit the [subordinates’] conduct was in error.’”) (cit. omitted); Rivas v. Freeman, 940 F. 2d 1491, 1495 (11th Cir. 1991) (“liability may be imposed due to the existence of an improper policy or from the absence of a policy’’); Guitierrez-Rodriguez v. Cartagena, 882 F.2d 553, 572-75 (1st Cir. 1989) (upholding judgment against police supervisors who “failed to properly investigate a potentially violent officer’’); Kerr v. City of West Palm Beach, 875 F.2d 1546, 1551, 1555-56 (11th Cir. 1989) (upholding jury verdict against City of West Palm Beach and its police chief for pattern of unconstitutional uses of force involving police dogs; the police department “had no specialized internal procedures for monitoring the performance of the canine unit’’); Fiacco v. City of Rensselaes., 783 F.2d 319, 332 (2nd Cir. 1986) (“the evidence was sufficient as a matter of law to permit a rational juror to find that the City had a policy of nonsupervision of its police officers that amounted to a deliberate indifference to their use of excessive force’’); Turpin v. Mailet, 619 F.2d 196, 198, 201 (2nd Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1016 (1980) (collecting cases), overruled in part on other grounds, Leatherman v. Tarrant County, 507 U.S. 163 (1993); Timberlake v. Benton, 786 F. Supp. 676, 696 (M.D. Tenn. 1992) (“when a city provides no guidance to its officers regarding such intrusive actions as strip searches, it must face the consequences of its inaction’’); Reynolds v. Borough of Avalon, 799 F. Supp. 442, 447 (D. N.J. 1992). According to the Fifth Circuit, in order to support liability a failure to have a Answering the question of what a plaintiff actually must show in order to impose liability for a lack of policy, the Eleventh Circuit has ruled: “[A]ny alleged failure to adopt adequate policies for inmate protection must amount to a breach of [defendant's] duty and must evidence reckless disregard or deliberate indifference to [plaintiff's] constitutional rights.”

f. Informal Policy (Custom and Practice)

A policy need not be formal. It may be informal and take the shape of a custom or practice. In Rizzo, the Supreme Court stated that official policies could be “express or otherwise.” Indeed, the very language of § 1983 compels this conclusion. It provides for liability against persons who violate federal law while acting “under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom or usage.” As the Court said in Monell:

“[A]lthough the touchstone of the § 1983 action against a government body is an allegation that official policy is responsible for a deprivation of rights policy must be “‘an intentional choice.’” Brumfield v. Hollins, 551 F.3d 322, 328 (5th Cir. 2008) (“At the time of Smith's death, clearly established law required that in a claim alleging failure to promulgate policy as a basis for § 1983 liability, the failure must be ‘an intentional choice’ and amount to subjective deliberate indifference.”).

---

See also Candace Cohn, Note, Municipality Liability Under Section 1983: The Failure to Act as “Custom or Policy,” 29 Wayne L. Rev. 1225, 1244 (1983) (“municipalities can and should be deemed liable for a custom or policy of inaction where action is necessary to protect the civil rights of the citizenry from abuse by government employees and officials”); Diane M. Allen, Annotation, Liability of Supervisory Officials and Governmental Entities for Having Failed to Adequately Train, Supervise, or Control Individual Peace Officers who Violate Plaintiff's Civil Rights Under 42 USCS § 1983, 70 A.L.R. Fed. 17.

75 Zatler v. Wainwright, 802 F.2d 397, 402 (11th Cir. 1986).

76 Rizzo, 423 U.S. at 371.

protected by the Constitution, local governments, like every other § 1983 ‘person,’ by the very terms of the statute, may be sued for constitutional deprivations visited pursuant to governmental ‘custom’ even though such a custom has not received formal approval through the body’s official decision making channels.\textsuperscript{78}

But, the Court went on to hold that the action must be “pursuant to official municipal policy of some nature.”\textsuperscript{79} Moreover, as the Court held in \textit{Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co.},\textsuperscript{80} and reaffirmed in \textit{Monell}: “[W]e think it clear that a ‘custom or usage, of (a) State’ for purposes of § 1983 must have the \textit{force of law} by virtue of the persistent practices of state officials.”\textsuperscript{81} The “social habits” or other “‘customs of the people’” do not satisfy the § 1983 standard.\textsuperscript{82}

A great deal of judicial effort has gone into determining the parameters of an informal policy or custom. The most significant decision is probably \textit{Rizzo}. There the Court said that in addition to a significant number of deprivations there must be a “common thread running through them.”\textsuperscript{83} The precise number of deprivations required for an informal policy depends on the case. However, one

\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{78}\textit{Monell}, 436 U.S. at 690-691.
\item \textsuperscript{79}\textit{Id.} at 691.
\item \textsuperscript{80}398 U.S. 144 (1970).
\item \textsuperscript{81}\textit{Adickes}, 398 U.S. at 167 (emphasis added).
\item \textsuperscript{82}\textit{Id.} at 166, 167 n.38.
\item \textsuperscript{83}\textit{Rizzo}, 423 U.S. at 375. Of course, there must still be an “affirmative link between the occurrence of the various incidents...and the adoption of [a] plan or policy.” \textit{Rizzo}, 423 U.S. at 371. In cases of informal policies or customs, the link is demonstrated by showing that constitutional violations are so widespread that the official “must have been aware of them.” \textit{Holland v. Connors}, 491 F.2d 539, 541 (5th Cir. 1974).
\end{itemize} incidents or isolated incidents are usually not enough.\footnote{Board of County Comm’s of Bryan County v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397 (1997) (holding that a single instance of inadequate employment screening of a deputy sheriff could not support § 1983 liability); City of Oklahoma City v. Tuttle, 471 U.S. at 821-23 (plurality opinion) (municipal liability cannot be based on isolated misconduct of a subordinate); id. at 830-32 (Brennan, J., concurring) (same); Webb v. Goord, 340 F.3d 105, 110 (2d Cir. 2003) (“plaintiffs have not shown that more than forty unrelated incidents occurring over ten years at thirteen separate DOCS facilities can satisfy their burden of proving that “the conditions of [their] confinement violate contemporary standards of decency’ ”) (cit. omitted); Pineda v. City of Houston, 291 F.3d 325, 330 (5th Cir. 2002) (“Eleven incidents each ultimately offering equivocal evidence of compliance with the Fourth Amendment cannot support a pattern of illegality in one of the Nation’s largest cities and police forces. The extrapolation fails both because the inference of illegality is truly uncompelling—giving presumptive weight as it does to the absence of a warrant—and because the sample of alleged unconstitutional events is just too small.”); Gable v. City of Chicago, 296 F.3d 531, 538 (7th Cir. 2002) (“three incidents were too few to indicate that the City had a widespread custom of which City policymakers had reason to be aware”); Church v. City of Huntsville, 30 F.3d 1332, 1345-46 (11th Cir. 1994) (“Even assuming that [incidents in which homeless were mistreated] amounted to constitutional violations, such isolated incidents can not support a finding that the plaintiffs demonstrated a substantial likelihood that a pervasive practice of constitutional violations now exists.”); Depew v. City of St. Marys, 787 F.2d 1496, 1499 (11th Cir. 1986) (“[I]t is generally necessary to show a persistent and wide-spread practice . . . . Normally random acts or isolated incidents are insufficient to establish a custom or policy.”); Gilmere v. City of Atlanta, 774 F.2d 1495, 1504 (11th Cir. 1985) (failure to train one policeman not sufficient for municipal liability); Marchant v. City of Little Rock, 741 F.2d 201, 204 (8th Cir. 1984) (“isolated instances” of which police chief had no knowledge); Dick v. Wantonwan County, 738 F.2d 939, 942 (8th Cir. 1984) (“first “isolated incident” [is] not enough to establish a policy or custom’ ”) (cit. omitted); Bennett v. City of Slidell, 728 F.2d 762, 767-68, 768 n.3 (5th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 472 U.S. 1016 (1985); Lozano v. Smith, 718 F.2d 756, 771 (5th Cir. 1983); Wellington v. Daniels, 717 F.2d 932, 937 (4th Cir. 1983); Iskander v. Village of Forest Park, 690 F.2d 126, 128-29 (7th Cir. 1982); Turpin v. Mailet, 619 F.2d 196, 202 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1016 (1980) (“a policy could not ordinarily be inferred from a single incident of illegality” but “a single, unusually brutal or egregious beating administered by a group of municipal employees may be sufficiently out of the ordinary to warrant an inference that it was attributable to inadequate training or supervision”), overruled in part on other grounds, Leatherman v. Tarrant County, 507 U.S. 163 (1993); McClelland v. Facteau, 610 F.2d 693, 696 (10th Cir. 1979); Williams v. Anderson, 599 F.2d 923, 925 (10th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1046 (1980); Taken Alive v. Litzen, 551 F.2d 196, 200 (8th Cir. 1977); Chestnut, 513 F.2d at 92. But see Wever v. Lincoln County, 388 F.3d 601, 607-08 (8th Cir. 2004) (“in most circumstances, a single incident does not provide a supervisor with notice of deficient training or supervision” but “this calculus is not rigid, and must change depending on the seriousness of the incident and its likelihood of
In order to support § 1983 liability, the deprivations must usually be “persistent and widespread . . . practices.”\textsuperscript{85} In other words, there must be a “pattern”\textsuperscript{86} or “systematic” practices.\textsuperscript{87}

In \textit{Rizzo}, the Court held that 16 constitutional violations by 7,500 policemen in Philadelphia—a city of three million inhabitants—over a period of a \textsuperscript{85}Adickes, 398 U.S. at 167. \textit{See also} Board of County Comm’rs v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 403-04 (1997) (“an act performed pursuant to a ‘custom’ that has not been formally approved by an appropriate decisionmaker may fairly subject a municipality to liability on the theory that the relevant practice is so widespread as to have the force of law”).

\textsuperscript{86}Rizzo, 423 U.S. at 374-75; see also Calhoun v. Ramsey, 408 F.3d 375, 378-82 (7\textsuperscript{th} Cir. 2005) (jury instruction upheld requiring inmate to show ‘widespread policy or practice that was so permanent and well settled as to constitute a custom or usage with the force of law’); Cottone v. Jenne, 326 F.3d 1352, 1360 (11\textsuperscript{th} Cir. 2003) (“The necessary causal connection can be established ‘when a history of widespread abuse puts the responsible supervisor on notice of the need to correct the alleged deprivation, and he fails to do so.’ ”) (cits. omitted); Artis v. Francis Howell North Band Booster Ass’n, 161 F.3d 1178, 1181-82 (8\textsuperscript{th} Cir. 1998) (“For the School District to be liable, Artis must prove that the School District had an official policy or widespread custom that violated the law and caused his injury . . . . An alleged illegal custom must be widespread and may only subject a school district to liability if it is pervasive enough to have the ‘force of law.’ ”) (cits. omitted); Maldonado-Denis v. Castillo-Rodriguez, 23 F.3d 576, 582 (1\textsuperscript{st} Cir. 1994) (“A causal link may also be forged if there exists a known history of widespread abuse sufficient to alert a supervisor to ongoing violations. When the supervisor is on notice and fails to take corrective action, say, by better training or closer oversight, liability may attach.”); Brown v. Crawford, 906 F.2d 667, 671 (11\textsuperscript{th} Cir. 1990) (“The deprivations that constitute widespread abuse sufficient to notify the supervising official must be obvious, flagrant, rampant, and of continued duration, rather than isolated occurrences.”) (\textit{quoted in} Braddy v. Florida Dep’t of Labor and Employment Sec., 133 F.3d 797, 802 (11\textsuperscript{th} Cir. 1998)); Jones v. City of Chicago, 856 F.2d 985, 995-96 (7\textsuperscript{th} Cir. 1988) (upholding judgment against city for Fourth Amendment violation resulting from custom of “maintenance of . . . ‘street files,’ [or] police files withheld from the state’s attorney and therefore unavailable as a source of exculpatory information” which was “department-wide and of long standing”); Watson v. Interstate Fire & Casualty Co., 611 F.2d 120, 123 (5\textsuperscript{th} Cir. 1980).

\textsuperscript{87}Hirst v. Gertzen, 676 F.2d 1252, 1263 (9\textsuperscript{th} Cir. 1982).
year did not show an informal policy or custom.\textsuperscript{88} Some indication of what the Court considers sufficient to establish an informal policy can be seen in its discussion in \textit{Rizzo} of other cases. For example, the Court cited \textit{Lankford v. Gelston},\textsuperscript{89} in which a police department conducted some 300 warrantless searches over a 19-day period in a black residential area.\textsuperscript{90} In \textit{Slakan v. Porter},\textsuperscript{91} the Fourth Circuit found that a pattern of seven recent unjustified water hosings of inmates, in addition to the one involving plaintiff, formed a pattern of which the defendant supervisory officials were aware and which supported § 1983 liability.\textsuperscript{92} There must be a sufficient number of incidents in order for municipal policymakers or supervisors to become aware of the conditions in question.\textsuperscript{93}

Illustrating these principles, the Eleventh Circuit concluded in \textit{Anderson v. City of Atlanta}\textsuperscript{94} that the evidence supported the finding of a “pattern or practice of incidents of indifference” regarding prison understaffing. By contrast, in another civil rights case against Atlanta, “[n]o evidence was presented of any other

\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{88}423 U.S. at 603, 605.
\item \textsuperscript{89}364 F.2d 197 (4\textsuperscript{th} Cir. 1966).
\item \textsuperscript{90}Rizzo, 423 U.S. at 373 n.8.
\item \textsuperscript{91}737 F.2d 368 (4\textsuperscript{th} Cir. 1984).
\item \textsuperscript{92}Id. at 373-75. See also McKenna v. Nassau County, 538 F. Supp. 737, 741 (E.D. N.Y.), aff’d, 714 F.2d 115 (2d Cir. 1982) (other inmate assaults had occurred in overcrowded prison and guards knew an assault was likely, yet did nothing to prevent or interrupt an assault); Means v. City of Chicago, 535 F. Supp. 455, 460 (N.D. Ill. 1982) (defendant police officers had been the subject of numerous complaints, some of which had been sustained).
\item \textsuperscript{93}See, e.g., Ross v. Reed, 719 F.2d 689, 699 (4\textsuperscript{th} Cir. 1973).
\item \textsuperscript{94}778 F.2d 678 (11\textsuperscript{th} Cir. 1985).
\end{itemize}
potential or actual adverse effects resulting from use of the restraint” that had led to the death of plaintiff’s decedent.\footnote{Owens v. City of Atlanta, 780 F.2d at 1568.} Thus there was no liability.

Finally, any plaintiff seeking to impose liability on an entity or supervisor based on an informal policy or custom should be very careful in describing the allegedly offending policy or custom. For instance, in \textit{Woodward v. Correctional Medical Services of Illinois, Inc.},\footnote{368 F.3d 917 (7th Cir. 2004).} the Seventh Circuit held that the lack of previous suicides in a county jail did not defeat a claim against the city because the pattern or practice in question was not previous suicides but the condoning of employees’ violations of its written policies.\footnote{Id. at 929.} Denying summary judgment, the district court in \textit{Galindez v. Miller},\footnote{285 F. Supp. 2d 190 (D. Conn. 2003).} held that there was an issue of fact, not as to whether a city directly authorized excessive force, but rather as to whether the city condoned excessive force by allowing civilian complaints of excessive force to “molder and gray without adequate attention (until the epiphany of federal civil rights litigation inspires action)”.\footnote{Id. at 199.}

\textbf{g. Authorization by Training and Supervision Practices (a Policy Subset)}

As pointed out earlier, the training and supervision of subordinates is sometimes treated as a distinct policy area. But, especially with respect to supervision, it is impossible to draw meaningful lines between this area and other

\begin{itemize}
\item \footnote{Owens v. City of Atlanta, 780 F.2d at 1568.}
\item \footnote{368 F.3d 917 (7th Cir. 2004).}
\item \footnote{Id. at 929.}
\item \footnote{285 F. Supp. 2d 190 (D. Conn. 2003).}
\item \footnote{Id. at 199.}
\end{itemize}
practices.\textsuperscript{100} For example, the policies that led to the sheriff's liability in \textit{Wanger v. Bonner},\textsuperscript{101} could be said to be matters of training, supervision, or simply procedure. It must be remembered that, as with respect to other policies, training and supervision practices may not be a basis for § 1983 liability unless they amount to defective (or at-fault) official policies.\textsuperscript{102}

It is helpful to distinguish two cases. Most § 1983 liability exposure for training and supervision practices probably results from the implementation of official policies, formal or informal, that through defective content proximately cause unconstitutional conduct. For example, as in \textit{Wanger}, a peace officer might be directed through training or supervision to make unreasonable searches and seizures.\textsuperscript{103} On the other hand, an entity or its supervisory personnel might incur § 1983 exposure by completely failing to train a subordinate. Taking the same example, liability might result from an unreasonable search by a policeman who had received no training with respect to searches. Such a failure to train might be seen as an informal policy or custom.

Thus, even where there is no defective policy content, there may still be § 1983 liability if there is a complete failure to train or supervise. In \textit{Monell}, for \textsuperscript{100}See \textit{City of Oklahoma City v. Tuttle}, 471 U.S. 808, 820 (1985) (plurality opinion) (pointing out that training and supervision practices fall under the policy label); \textit{McCoy v. City of Monticello}, 411 F.3d 920, 922 (8th Cir. 2005); \textit{Taylor v. Canton, Ohio Police Dept.}, 544 F. Supp. 783, 790 (N.D. Ohio 1982).

\footnotesize{

\textsuperscript{101}621 F.2d 675 (5th Cir. 1980).

\textsuperscript{102}See \textit{Williams v. Bennett}, 689 F.2d at 1380.

\textsuperscript{103}621 F.2d at 679-83 (liability resulted from three unwritten policies). See supra at 18.
}
example, the Court intimated that a complete failure to supervise could result in § 1983 liability. The Court said:

By our decision in Rizzo v. Goode, we would appear to have decided that the mere right to control without any control or direction having been exercised and without any failure to supervise is not enough to support § 1983 liability.\(^{104}\)

Although deficiencies may be present, only deliberate indifference in training or supervision may result in civil rights liability. In City of Canton v. Harris,\(^{105}\) the Court explained that mere negligence in training or supervision is insufficient to support § 1983 liability.\(^{106}\) According to the Court, “To adopt lesser standards of fault and causation would open municipalities to unprecedented liability under § 1983.”\(^{107}\) Such a lesser standard would “result in de facto respondeat superior liability on municipalities” inasmuch as “[i]n virtually every instance . . . a § 1983 plaintiff will be able to point to something the city ‘could have done’ to prevent the unfortunate incident.”\(^{108}\)

Generally, completion of state-mandated training is sufficient to avoid \(^{104}\) 436 U.S. at 694 n.58 (cits. omitted).

\(^{106}\) 489 U.S. at 388-89 (“We hold today that the inadequacy of police training may serve as the basis for § 1983 liability only where the failure to train amounts to deliberate indifference to the rights of persons with whom the police come into contact.”). See also J.H. v. West Valley City, 840 P.2d 115, 118-22 (Utah 1992) (although police officer who molested minor was not supervised in his duties involving youth and received no additional training regarding dealing with youth, summary judgment to city upheld inasmuch plaintiff could not show deliberate indifference or a “close nexus between city policy and his damages”); Taylor, 544 F. Supp. at 789-90 (training deficient but not “grossly inadequate”—so no supervisory liability).
\(^{107}\) 489 U.S. at 391.
\(^{108}\) Id. at 392.
liability based on training deficiencies. In Cannon v. Taylor, the Eleventh Circuit held that a Columbus, Georgia police officer who caused the death of Lema Cannon in an automobile collision was adequately trained and supervised.

The testimony and documentary evidence reveals that Officer Taylor received the standard police academy training on operating his vehicle and on applicable state laws. Additionally, the state law on operating police vehicles over the speed limit was reproduced in the Columbus police manual. This Court is unwilling to say that this training procedure is so inherently inadequate as to subject the City to liability in the absence of past officer misconduct resulting from lack of training.\(^{110}\)

In many other cases, compliance with state training requirements has been held sufficient to defeat § 1983 claims based on inadequate training.\(^{111}\)

Moreover, as suggested above, a single instance of inadequate training cannot support § 1983 liability.\(^{112}\) Any other rule would, of course, circumvent the Supreme Court’s above-discussed holding that entity and supervisory liability cannot be based on a single instance or a sporadic pattern of unconstitutional subordinate conduct.

\(^{109}\)782 F.2d 947, 951 (11th Cir. 1986).

\(^{110}\)Id. at 951. Because Cannon predated City of Canton v. Harris, the court in Cannon applied the less stringent standard of “gross negligence.” Yet, even under this more plaintiff-friendly standard, the court found the training in Cannon adequate.

\(^{111}\)Walker v. Norris, 917 F.2d 1449, 1457 (6th Cir. 1990) (prison guard who completed a three-week state academy course, and received annual in-service training was adequately trained); Colburn v. Upper Darby Township, 946 F.2d 1017, 1028 (3d Cir. 1991) (no deliberate indifference shown where police officers had completed state police academy course); Vine v. County of Ingham, 884 F. Supp. 1153, 1159 (W.D. Mich. 1995).

\(^{112}\)Gilmere, 774 F.2d 1504.
2. RATIFICATION

In some circumstances, § 1983 liability of a supervisor or entity may be based on ratification of the unconstitutional conduct of a subordinate. For example, plaintiffs sometimes argue that a city or county is liable for unconstitutional conduct of a police officer because the entity upheld or approved the officer’s conduct through an internal affairs report or personnel board decision clearing him of misconduct charges.

Support for ratification as a theory of § 1983 liability can be found in a number of decisions. In the leading case of City of St. Louis v. Praprotnik, a plurality of the Supreme Court said:

[When a subordinate’s decision is subject to review by the municipality’s authorized policymakers they have retained the authority to measure the official’s conduct for conformance with their policies. If the authorized policymakers approve a subordinate’s decision and the basis for it, their ratification would be chargeable to the municipality because their decision is final.]

The Court labeled this statement as a guiding “principle,” but did not apply the ratification doctrine in Praprotnik.

Many other courts have addressed ratification in § 1983 cases. Seventh Circuit Judge Richard Posner, in characteristically plain prose, has summarized “that by adopting an employee's action as its own (what is called ‘ratification’), a public employer becomes the author of the action for purposes of liability under \[114\] Id. at 127 (emphasis original).

\[115\] Id.
Numerous courts have recognized that ratification may provide an adequate basis for liability under § 1983.

117 See Matthews v. Columbia County, 294 F.3d 1294, 1297-98 (11th Cir. 2002) (“County liability on the basis of ratification exists when a subordinate public official makes an unconstitutional decision and when that decision is then adopted by someone who does have final policymaking authority. The final policymaker, however, must ratify not only the decision itself, but also the unconstitutional basis for it.”); Kujawski v. Board of Comm’rs of Bartholomew County, 183 F.3d 734, 736-37 (7th Cir. 1999); Christie v. Iopa, 176 F.3d 1231, 1239-40 (9th Cir. 1999) (reversing the district court’s grant of summary judgment on a § 1983 claim against a supervising prosecutor because there was evidence that he had ratified his subordinate’s selective prosecution of the plaintiff); Baskin v. City of Des Plaines, 138 F.3d 701, 705 (7th Cir. 1998) (“it is well settled that a plaintiff seeking to establish a § 1983 claim against a municipality based on a ‘ratification’ theory must allege that a municipal official with final policymaking authority approved the subordinate’s decision and the basis for it”); Hyland v. Wonder, 117 F.3d 405, 416 (9th Cir. 1997) (with respect to termination of volunteer probation worker and banning him from juvenile hall in retaliation for his speech criticizing management and conditions, holding municipality liable because “the uncontradicted evidence in the record establishes that the officials with authority over access to Juvenile Hall, Judge Wonder of the Superior Court and later the [Juvenile Probation Commission], both ratified the ban of [plaintiff] from Juvenile Hall, and so municipal liability exists”); K. Au Hoon v. City of Honolulu, 1991 WL 1677 (9th Cir. 1991) (“[I]t is not correct to say that only actions approved in advance are ‘ratified’ for purposes of imposing liability on a municipality under section 1983. To do so confuses decisionmaking authority with policymaking authority, and further ignores the fact that ratification demonstrates that the act was consonant with the policy of the entity.”); Larez v. City of Los Angeles, 946 F.2d 630, 646 (9th Cir. 1991) (“evidence that Chief Gates, an authorized policymaker on police matters, . . . made, or ratified a decision that deprived plaintiffs of their constitutional rights would suffice for official liability under Pembaur”); Hammond v. County of Madera, 859 F.2d 797, 802 (9th Cir. 1988) (“The Board therefore ratified the misconduct which gives rise to the County’s liability.”), overruled in part on other grounds, L.W. v. Grubbs, 92 F.3d 894, 897-98 (1996); Thompson v. City of Los Angeles, 885 F.2d 1439, 1443 (9th Cir. 1989) (“a rule or regulation promulgated, adopted, or ratified by a local governmental entity’s legislative body unquestionably satisfies Monell’s policy requirement”); Garza v. City of Omaha, 814 F.2d 553, 556 (8th Cir. 1987) (upholding jury verdict against city because “the disparate treatment of which Garza complained took place over a period of several years” and was “both investigated and ratified by persons in the highest positions of management subordinate supervisory personnel”); Goodson v. City of Atlanta, 763 F.2d 1381, 1388 (11th Cir. 1985) (holding that by failing to take action on complaints about conditions at the City of Atlanta Jail, “it appears that the City Council ratified the customs, policies, and procedures of the Director . . . during the time
Some pattern jury instructions for § 1983 cases include ratification as a basis for liability. For example, the Ninth Circuit model charge provides:

In order to prevail on [his] [her] § 1983 claim against defendant [_________] alleging liability based on ratification by a final policymaker, the plaintiff must prove each of the following elements by a preponderance of the evidence:

1 [_________] acted under color of law;
2 the act[s] of [_________] deprived the plaintiff of [his] [her] particular rights under [the laws of the United States] [the United States Constitution] as explained in later instructions;
3 [_________] acted under color of law;
4 [_________] had final policymaking authority from defendant [_________] concerning the act[s] of [__________]; and 5 [_________] ratified [__________]'s act and the basis for it, that is, [_________] knew of and specifically approved of the employee's act[s].

A person acts “under color of law” when the person acts or purports to act in the performance of official duties under any state, county, or municipal law, ordinance, or regulation. [The parties have stipulated that] period immediately after and prior to the incidents complained of by [plaintiff] Goodson”); Marchese v. Lucas, 758 F.2d 181, 188 (6th Cir. 1985) (failure to conduct “serious investigation” into assault by police held to be “ratification of the illegal acts of the unidentified officers whom the jury found to have inflicted injuries upon plaintiff Marchese which plaintiff claims warranted a judgment in his favor of $125,000 from the Sheriff and the County”); Batista v. Rodriguez, 702 F.2d 393, 397 (2d Cir. 1983) (“We have held that municipal inaction such as the persistent failure to discipline subordinates who violate civil rights could give rise to an inference of an unlawful municipal policy of ratification of unconstitutional conduct, within the meaning of Monell.”) (citing cases); Shape v. Barnes County, 396 F. Supp.2d 1067, 1076-1077 (D. N.D. 2005) (regardless of whether sheriff was policymaker, county could be held liable because “the Board of Commissioners directly ratified the Sheriff's decision,” which allegedly violated the plaintiff’s First Amendment rights); Adler v. Lincoln Hous. Auth., 544 A.2d 576, 582 (R.I. 1988) (because “the board of commissioners retains control and final authority over the executive director” and “[t]he board ratified the decision . . . to terminate plaintiff, ‘Pembaur is applicable to the instant case and . . . the trial justice erred in dismissing the § 1983 civil rights claim against the Lincoln Housing Authority’”; “[t]he housing authority, as a properly constituted administrative body, is liable for acts that it has officially sanctioned or ordered”). Contra McQuerter v. City of Atlanta, 572 F. Supp. 1401, 1420 (N.D. Ga. 1983) (“ratification” by failure to discipline police officers involved in an excessive use of force did not support the inference that the City’s police department had a policy of using excessive force and failing to give medical attention).

[I instruct you that] the defendant's [official] [employee] acted under color of law.]

I instruct you that [___________] had final policymaking authority from defendant [___________] concerning the act[s] at issue and, therefore, the fourth element requires no proof.

If you find the plaintiff has proved each of these elements, and if you find that the plaintiff has proved all the elements [he] [she] is required to prove under Instruction [___________], your verdict should be for the plaintiff. If, on the other hand, the plaintiff has failed to prove any one or more of these elements, your verdict should be for the defendant.¹¹⁸

Before § 1983 liability can be based on ratification, it is necessary, of course, that there be an underlying unconstitutional act by a subordinate or employee. For example, if a police officer uses constitutional force, approval or ratification by the agency for which he works cannot establish liability against the agency.¹¹⁹

Inasmuch as § 1983 is “read against the background of tort liability,”¹²⁰ it is instructive to consult tort law on ratification. American law generally allows tort liability by ratification.¹²¹ Ratification also is an accepted basis for liability under contract law.¹²²

¹¹⁹Harris County v. Going, 896 S.W.2d 305, 309 (Tex.App. Houston, 1st Dist., 1995) (if decisionmaker “did not violate Going’s constitutional rights, the ratification of such action cannot constitute a violation of those rights”).

¹²¹RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF AGENCY §§ 4.01-4.08 (2006).

a. Elements of Ratification under Restatement of Agency

What is ratification and how does one prove it? According to the Third Restatement of Agency,

(1) Ratification is the affirmance of a prior act done by another, whereby the act is given effect as if done by an agent acting with actual authority.

(2) A person ratifies an act by
   (a) manifesting assent that the act shall affect the person’s legal relations, or
   (b) conduct that justifies a reasonable assumption that the person so consents.

(3) Ratification does not occur unless
   (a) the act is ratifiable as stated in § 4.03,
   (b) the person ratifying has capacity as stated in § 4.04,
   (c) the ratification is timely as stated in § 4.05, and
   (d) the ratification encompasses the act in its entirety as stated in § 4.07.

It is important that ratification occurs after the act that is purportedly affirmed or ratified. And although ratification operates as authorization, it is not actually a form of authorization. Authorization is usually understood as approval that occurs before the event that is said to be authorized.

---

123 Restatement (Third) of Agency § 4.01. The Second Restatement put it: “Ratification is the affirmance by a person of a prior act which did not bind him but which was done or professedly done on his account, whereby the act, as to some or all persons, is given effect as if originally authorized by him.” Restatement (Second) of Agency § 82 (1958).

124 Restatement (Third) of Agency § 4.02 (2006) (“ratification retroactively creates the effects of actual authority”); § 4.01 (“Ratification is the affirmance of a prior act done by another . . . .”); § 4.01, Cmt. b (“Although ratification creates the legal effects of actual authority, it reverses in time the sequence between an agent’s conduct and the principal’s manifestation of assent.”); Villanueva v. Brown, 103 F.3d 1128, 1139 (3d Cir. 1977) (“Her act of signing the Investment Agreement clearly does not ratify an event which had not yet occurred. She cannot ratify an action that she is not aware of.”).

125 Restatement (Second) of Agency § 84, Cmt. b (1958) (“Ratification is not a form of authorization, but its peculiar characteristic is that ordinarily it has the same effect as authorization . . . .”).
In some circumstances, ratification can occur even in the course of litigation that occurs after the act that is said to be ratified. According to Comments to the Third Restatement, “A person may ratify an unauthorized act by taking a position in litigation that is warranted only by consent to be bound by the act.”\footnote{RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF AGENCY § 4.01, Cmt. h, Reporter’s Notes h (2006). See Bell Atl. Network Servs., Inc. v. P.M. Video Corp., 730 A.2d 406, 424 (N.J. Super. App. Div. 1999) (holding that corporation’s instituting a declaratory judgment action and conducting a single defense with its employee effected ratification).}

In order for ratification to occur, there must be a ratifiable act and capacity to ratify the act. Regarding acts that are ratifiable, the Third Restatement states simply: “A person may ratify an act if the actor acted or purported to act as an agent on the person's behalf.”\footnote{RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF AGENCY § 4.03 (2006).} The Third Restatement also provides: “A person may ratify an act if (a) the person existed at the time of the act, and (b) the person had capacity as defined in § 3.04 at the time of ratifying the act [i.e., ‘at the time the agent takes action, the individual would have capacity if acting in person’].”\footnote{RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF AGENCY § 4.04 (2006) (quoting § 3.04).}

The Second Restatement gives the following description of acts that may be ratified:

1. An act which, when done, could have been authorized by a purported principal, or if an act of service by an intended principal, can be ratified if, at the time of affirmance, he could authorize such an act.

2. An act which, when done, the purported or intended principal could not have authorized, he cannot ratify, except an act affirmed by a legal representative whose appointment relates back to or before the time of such
This language is very important because it limits potential liability by ratification to persons or entities that could authorize the act in question. Note that according to the Third Restatement, “the relevant time to determine whether the principal has capacity to ratify is the time of ratification” and “it is not necessary for ratification that the principal have had capacity as well at the time of the act that the ratification concerns.” The Restatement gives the example of a minor who may ratify a contract although at the time the contract was signed the minor did not have the capacity to enter into a binding contract.\(^{130}\)

Thus, applying these principles, a non-supervisory police officer who congratulates a fellow officer for using excessive force against an arrestee could not be held liable through ratification because as a non-supervisor the first officer could not have authorized the excessive force. However, if the non-supervisory officer has, since the use of force, sailed on favorable winds to become the police chief, it appears that under the Third Restatement he could then ratify as chief.

It is not required that affirmance or ratification take any particular form. “It is a question of fact whether conduct is sufficient to indicate consent.”\(^{131}\) Ratification may be proven circumstantially.\(^{132}\) Importantly, ratification may \(^{129}\) Restatement (Second) Of Agency § 84 (1958).

\(^{130}\) Restatement (Third) Of Agency § 4.04, Cmt. b, Reporter’s Notes a (2006).

\(^{132}\) See Restatement (Third) Of Agency § 4.06, Reporter’s Notes b (2006) (for ratification purposes, “[a] principal’s knowledge may be established circumstantially”). occur by silence. “A principal may ratify an act by failing to object to it or to repudiate it.” According to the comments to the Third Restatement, in some circumstances, “failure to terminate may constitute ratification” as may “the promotion or celebration” of an employee. For example, in Bielicki v. Terminx Int’l Co., the Tenth Circuit upheld an award of punitive damages based on ratification by the principal, a pest control company, of its employee’s tortious conduct in spraying a harmful pesticide in a prison. There was evidence that, after spraying caused illness of prisoners and staff, a supervisor told the employee not to “worry about it” and make sure the company got paid, while another supervisor “regularly joke[d] about the incident by stating that [the employee] was ‘sav[ing] the taxpayers money’ by ‘getting rid of the inmates.’ ”

There is no actionable ratification unless the person who performed the original act purported to act on behalf of the ratifier. According to the Third Restatement, “A person may ratify an act if the actor acted or purported to act as agent on the person’s behalf.” Hence, a city or county that employs a police officer who while off-duty shoots someone in a private dispute, without a display of police authority, would probably not be liable even if it later affirms the officer’s conduct.

---

135 225 F.3d 1159 (10th Cir. 2000).

136 Id. at 1164.

Unlike authorization which usually confers some general power on an agent, ratification may apply to discrete acts or transactions. Comments to the Third Restatement make this point: “The impact of a principal’s ratification may be limited to a single act or transaction, in contrast to acquiescence by the principal that may be understood by the agent as a manifestation by the principal creating actual authority for similar acts in the future.”138 The potential usefulness of ratification to § 1983 plaintiffs is evident here as well. Under mainstream case law, a defective policy supporting the liability of an entity or supervisor cannot normally be based on a single or sporadic incidents.139 Rather, “persistent and widespread . . . practices” must usually be proven.140

A person or entity that might be in a position to ratify can avoid that result if it does not have all the material facts at the time of ratification. The Third Restatement provides: “A person is not bound by a ratification made without knowledge of material facts involved in the original act when the person was principal is not a stranger to the agent” and “whether to ratify is a choice an undisclosed principal should be free to make”).

139See supra at 22.
140Adickes, 398 U.S. at 167. See also Board of County Com’rs of Bryan County, 520 U.S. at 403-04.
unaware of such lack of knowledge.”¹⁴¹ But ratification may still nevertheless occur because “[a] principal may choose to affirm without knowing the material facts.” In other words, the lack of knowledge of material facts “creat[es] an election to avoid a ratification.”¹⁴² Thus, for instance, a city that clears a complaint against a police officer who used excessive force might avoid ratification if the officer lied about his conduct. But the city might nevertheless be liable through ratification if, after learning of the lies, the city continues its position.

In order for ratification to occur, it is not necessary that a purported principal communicate the affirmance to anyone. “The manifestation of a definitive election by the principal constitutes affirmance without communication to the agent, to the other party, or to other persons.”¹⁴³

The Restatements also describe several exceptions to ratification. According to the Third Restatement,

(2) Ratification is not effective:

   (a) in favor of a person who causes it by misrepresentation or other conduct that would make a contract voidable;

   (b) in favor of an agent against a principal when the principal ratifies to avoid a loss; or

   (c) to diminish the rights or other interests of persons, not parties

¹⁴¹RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF AGENCY § 4.06 (2006); RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF AGENCY § 91 (1958) (predecessor to § 4.06).

¹⁴²RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF AGENCY § 4.06, Cmt. b (2006).

¹⁴³RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF AGENCY § 95 (1958).
to the transaction, that were acquired in the subject matter prior to the ratification.

If applied in a police misconduct case, these exceptions would limit in several respects potential ratification liability of an entity or supervisor. For example, ratification would not occur if a victim of police misconduct misstates or lies in an internal affairs complaint about the extent of the misconduct and the entity or supervisor subsequently clears the misconduct.

Finally the Restatement states that in some cases, although the elements of ratification are not formally met, a person or entity may be estopped to deny ratification. According to the Restatement, “If a person makes a manifestation that the person has ratified another’s act and the manifestation, as reasonably understood by a third party, induces the third party to make a detrimental change in position, the person may be stopped to deny the ratification.” For example, although when, under Third Restatement § 4.01, a writing is necessary to ratify a transaction (because “written authorization is necessary to bind the principal to the transaction through the act of an agent”), the purported principal may be stopped to deny ratification “when a third party changes position in reliance on a person’s manifestation that a writing requisite to ratification has been executed by the person.”

———

144Restatement (Third) Of Agency § 4.02 (2006); Restatement (Second) Of Agency § 101 (1958) (predecessor to § 4.02).

145Restatement (Third) Of Agency § 4.08 (2006); Restatement (Second) Of Agency § 103 (1958) (predecessor to § 4.08).

b. The Causation Hurdle in § 1983 Ratification Liability

But how can federal courts allow § 1983 liability based solely on post-deprivation ratification, which by definition could not be said to have caused the deprivation? As discussed above, causation is required by the express language of § 1983 and the courts strictly enforce the requirement.147

However, even if one rejects ratification as inconsistent with the causation requirement, evidence of post-deprivation ratification may nevertheless be admissible to show what the relevant policy was before the deprivation.148 This 147 See Looney v. City of Wilmington, 723 F. Supp. 1025, 1037 (D. Del. 1989) (“the Supreme Court's emphasis on the element of causation in actions involving municipal liability is a second reason to find that ratification of an employee's actions must occur prior to when the employee acts”); Alexander v. Beale St. Blues Co., 108 F. Supp. 2d 934, 949 (W.D. Tenn. 1999) (holding that city could not be liable for failing to reprimand, discipline or terminate” officers for allegedly excessive force and other § 1983 claims “because subsequent ratification could not have caused [victim’s] death”); Gainor v. Douglas County, 59 F. Supp. 2d 1259, 1293 (N.D. Ga. 1998) (“A post hoc approval of an action already taken could not possibly be the motivating force for causing the action to be taken. Thus, in order to impose liability under a ratification based theory, it is necessary to show prior ratification of the policy giving rise to the action alleged to have violated the plaintiff's federal rights, such that the ratification of that policy could be said to be the moving force behind the alleged constitutional violation.”)); Jack C. Hanssen, Note, Municipal Liability Under 42 U.S.C. §1983 and the Ratification Theory of City of St. Louis v. Praprotnik: An Analysis of Federal Circuit Treatment, 27 J. LEGIS. 361, 367 (2001) (“The federal circuits, upon encountering the ratification theory of Praprotnik, were immediately faced with the dilemma of applying the common law of agency to a §1983 cause of action with the strict causation requirement imposed by Monell.”)

---

148 See Foley v. City of Lowell, 948 F.2d 10, 14 (1st Cir. 1991) (“actions taken subsequent to an event are admissible if, and to the extent that, they provide reliable insight into the policy in force at the time of the incident”); Larez v. City of Los Angeles, 946 F.2d 630, 645 (9th Cir. 1991) (“Policy or custom may be inferred if, after [constitutional violations], . . . officials took no steps to reprimand or discharge the[ir] subordinates], or if they otherwise failed to admit the [subordinates’] conduct was in error.”) (cit. omitted); McRorie v. Shimoda, 795 F.2d 780, 784 (9th Cir. 1986); Grandstaff v. City of Borger, 767 F.2d 161, 171 (5th Cir. 1985) (“subsequent acceptance of dangerous recklessness by the policymaker tends to prove his preexisting disposition and can be seen as a brand (or the substantial equivalent) of ratification liability.

c. Case Study: Police Internal Affairs Reports

Most law enforcement agencies have departments that receive and investigate citizen complaints against officers. They usually travel under names such as internal affairs, professional standards, or review boards. As one treatise states, “Every police agency needs a functional Internal Affairs Unite (IAU) or person charged with the responsibility to oversee the acceptance, investigation, and adjudication of complaints about police performance.”149 Some larger cities also have civilian boards that review complaints against officers.150 After investigating complaints, reviewing agencies typically issue reports finding allegations of misconduct unfounded, unsubstantiated, or sustained.151 These reports may become the basis for discipline.

151 See Thibault, supra note 149, at 252-53; Roberg, supra note 149, at 365.
Many observers doubt the integrity and effectiveness of internal affairs procedures. One commentator has said:

Internal affairs is viewed with suspicion from two fronts. For citizens, suspicions are often raised as to whether making complaints will make any difference since they believe that the police will “whitewash” the incident. For police officers, internal affairs poses a threat in that it abrogates the entire notion of fraternity found in the police subculture—the inconceivable idea that fellow officers will prosecute another, resulting in fines, suspension, forced retirement, or jail.152

The “Standards for Law Enforcement Agencies” issued by the Commission on Accreditation for Law Enforcement Agencies, Inc. (“CALEA”) require that all law enforcement agencies fulfill the internal affairs function. The CALEA standards emphasize the importance of internal affairs:

The internal affairs function is important for the maintenance of professional conduct in a law enforcement agency. The integrity of the agency depends on the personal integrity and discipline of each employee. To a large degree, the public image of the agency is determined by the quality of the internal affairs function in responding to allegations of misconduct by the agency or its employees.

* * *

Agencies having an internal affairs function consistent with these standards will have the capability to respond appropriately to allegations of misfeasance, malfeasance, and nonfeasance by employees, and to complaints about the agency’s response to community needs, thereby instilling public confidence in the agency.”153

---

152Thibault, supra note 149, at 252. See also Steven Box and Ken Russell, The Politics of Discredibility: Disarming Complaints Against the Police, Robert Reiner, ed., POLICING VOLUME II CONTROLING THE CONTROLLERS; POLICE DISCRETION AND ACCOUNTABILITY 315 (Dartmouth, 1996) (reviewing techniques used to discredit complaints against the police in England and Wales).

153Commission on Accreditation for Law Enforcement Agencies, STANDARDS FOR LAW ENFORCEMENT, ch. 52 (5th ed. 2006).
Under CALEA, an agency must, in order to be accredited, comply with numerous standards including the investigation of all complaints, specific time limits for investigations, status reports to complainants, reaching a “conclusion of fact” regarding each allegation, and the maintenance of records.¹⁵⁴

May a police internal affairs report establish ratification by a city, municipality, other entity, police chief, or supervisor? A number of different scenarios may provoke this question:

1. an internal affairs report may clear officers of charges and result in no discipline,
2. an internal affairs report may sustain charges of misconduct yet result in no discipline,
3. an internal affairs department may conduct no investigation of a complaint, or
4. an internal affairs department may keep no records of complaints, investigations, or its findings (making it difficult to establish a pattern or practice of misconduct).¹⁵⁵

Several courts have faced issues regarding the effect of internal affairs reports in § 1983 litigation. Reversing on other grounds, the Ninth Circuit in ¹⁵⁴Id. at ¶¶ 52.1.1, et seq.

¹⁵⁵If an internal affairs report sustains charges of misconduct and results in discipline, it obviously cannot be maintained that the agency or an involved supervisor ratified the misconduct.
Larez v. City of Los Angeles, 156 held that the evidence was sufficient to support a judgment against Los Angeles Police Chief Daryl Gates for an unreasonable search and excessive force committed by his officers. Due the district court’s erroneous admission of hearsay, the court remanded for a new trial as to Gates and the City.

One of the plaintiffs, who were all members of the Larez family, had filed an internal affairs complaint with the Los Angeles Police Department (“LAPD”), but “[i]n a letter signed by Chief Gates, Jessie [Larez] ultimately was notified that none of the many allegations in his complaint could be sustained.” 157 Citing plaintiffs’ police practices expert, the Ninth Circuit ruled that by signing this letter Gates “ratif[ied] the investigation into the Larezes’ complaint” and therefore “[t]he jury’s verdict was not in plain error.” The court held that this action by Gates was sufficient to support his liability and apparently also that of the City. 158

Like many courts, the Ninth Circuit mixed its discussion of ratification with statements that the failure to discipline could establish a policy of authorizing police misconduct. The court held: “ ‘Policy or custom may be inferred if, after [constitutional violations], . . . officials took no steps to reprimand or discharge the[ir] subordinates], or if they otherwise failed to admit the [subordinates’]

156 946 F.2d 630 (9th Cir. 1991).
157 Id. at 635.
158 Id. at 646-47.
conduct was in error.”

Careful analysis requires that liability by ratification be kept distinct from liability based on a formal or informal policy. True ratification occurs where an entity or supervisor becomes liable, for purposes of our case study, by post-event affirmance of alleged police misconduct. Liability by true ratification does not occur, however, when an entity or supervisor is held liable because its post-event conduct is construed as reflecting a culpable pre-event custom or policy. Liability based on this latter concept may resemble liability based on ratification, but close examination shows it to be a different animal. In § 1983 cases, courts often confuse or conflate these concepts.

---

159 Id. at 645 (cit. omitted).

160 Note that evidence of the pre-event policy may include internal affairs clearance or other approval of prior incidents of police misconduct. See Guiterrez-Rodriguez v. Cartagena, 882 F.2d 553, 572-75 (1st Cir. 1989) (upholding admission of 13 civilian complaint files against one officer at § 1983 trial for unconstitutional shooting on theory that prior complaints, 12 of which resulted in dismissal of charges, were not offered to prove the truth of the charges or culpable conduct but rather “the effectiveness of the police disciplinary mechanism” and “supervisory liability”). Again, this is not liability based on true ratification, which would require post-event affirmance of the event upon which the current suit is based. Note that entity and supervisory liability on the basis of inadequate discipline or inadequate response to prior citizen complaints is a species of liability based on informal policy or custom, which is discussed above.

161 Jack C. Hanssen, Note, Municipal Liability Under 42 U.S.C. §1983 and the Ratification Theory of City of St. Louis v. Praprotnik: An Analysis of Federal Circuit Treatment, 27 J. LEGIS. 361, 378-79 (2001). The concepts are confused in Stephen Yagman and Harold S. Lewis, Jr., POLICE MISCONDUCT & CIV. RIGHTS § 4-1.94 (2007), which recommends the following as a jury instruction: “Refusing seriously to investigate an incident or to discipline the involved officers may constitute a pattern of conduct that ratified bad conduct as may recklessly ignoring evidence that government employees had violated plaintiff’s constitutional rights in attempting to secure their malicious prosecution.” This is mistaken because it omits affirmance, which is a necessary element of ratification. A better jury instruction on ratification is the Ninth Circuit’s model charge, which includes the affirmance element by requiring the plaintiff to prove that the Another case from the intersection of ratification and police internal affairs matters is Batista v. Rodriguez.\(^{162}\) Three citizens filed formal complaints with the Bridgeport, Connecticut Police Department regarding their arrest. The Bridgeport Board of Police Commissioners held a hearing but “did not take disciplinary action” against the officers.\(^{163}\) In their § 1983 suit, the citizens alleged that the city’s liability was established on the following basis:

“The failure on the part of the defendant City to take any disciplinary action whatever in any of the cases in which police officers of said City have been found responsible for violations of civil rights by the U.S. District Court and the promotion of one of the police officers of the defendant City after a jury had awarded punitive damages against him for violation of civil rights, together with a refusal to allow complainants to be present with counsel while they are being subjected to cross-examination by counsel for the police officers complained about, constitute either a negligent or wilful and malicious course of conduct designed to promote violations of civil rights. Said conduct by the defendant City is either a nonfeasance or malfeasance for which the defendant City is liable to the plaintiffs.”\(^{164}\)

The Second Circuit recognized that ratification could support civil rights liability:

We have held that municipal inaction such as the persistent failure to discipline subordinates who violate civil rights could give rise to an inference of an unlawful municipal policy of ratification of unconstitutional conduct, within the meaning of Monell.\(^{165}\)

But, overturning a judgment against the city, the court held that the plaintiffs’

---

\(^{162}\) 702 F.2d 393 (2d Cir. 1983).
\(^{163}\) Id. at 394-95.
\(^{164}\) Id. at 395 n.11.
\(^{165}\) Id. at 397.
allegations were not sufficient to allege a claim:

The Fourth Count, however, fails completely to allege that the City's pattern of inaction caused the plaintiffs any compensable injury. It does not claim that the alleged unlawful arrests and assault of November 8, 1976, were the product of the City's alleged policy and practice or that the policy was even a substantial factor leading to those injuries. Indeed, the Fourth Count makes no reference at all to the events of November 8. For instance, there is no claim that officers Rodriguez and Nadrizny knew of the Board's alleged past failure to discipline or of any pattern of inaction, condonation, or rewarding of unlawful conduct on the part of the City, from which it might be inferred that they implemented it, whether or not in good faith. Nor does that count allege conduct from which a causal connection between the City's policy of inaction and the arrests and assault might permissibly be implied, such as inadequate training and supervision or prior instances of unusual brutality indicating deliberate indifference or gross negligence on the part of the municipal officials in charge.166

Issues regarding ratification and police internal affairs reports also emerged in Fiacco v. City of Rensselaer,167 where the Second Circuit resolved a § 1983 claim against the City of Rensselaer, NY, its police chief and two of its officers. Without using the term “ratification,” the court upheld a judgment against the City because “the evidence was sufficient as a matter of law to permit a rational juror to find that the City had a policy of nonsupervision of its police officers that amounted to a deliberate indifference to their use of excessive force.”168 Reciting evidence of failures to investigate prior excessive force complaints against police officers and the failure of the City’s Public Safety Board even to provide the required “form on which a civilian could make a complaint against a police 166 Id. at 398 (cits. omitted).

---

167 783 F.2d 319 (2d Cir. 1986).
168 Id. at 332.
The evidence was sufficient to permit the jury to find that the City Charter outlined procedures for the consideration of charges against policemen, but that in the period prior to Fiacco’s arrest the Public Safety Board had never implemented those procedures and had never held a hearing into a civilian complaint against a policeman. The evidence showed that within the 22-month period preceding Fiacco’s arrest, five complaints were made that City police officers had used excessive force, either in making arrests or in transporting or detaining those whom they had already arrested; four of the complaints came within the ten months preceding Fiacco’s arrest. Any investigation of these charges was done by [Police Chief] Stark himself, for he never assigned anyone else to make an investigation. Stark’s sole investigative act in most instances consisted of questioning the officers accused. In none of those instances did Stark open an investigative file or place any notation in the officer’s file. In no instance did Stark take a written statement from any of the five complainants. He did not even interview three of them.169

As discussed above, this is not true ratification.

Another case illustrating these principles is Kibbe v. City of Springfield,170 in which a city was held liable under § 1983 for the fatal shooting of a fleeing motorist by one of its officers. The First Circuit upheld the judgment against the city based on its “policy of inadequate training.”171 The court rejected the district court’s rationale in denying judgment notwithstanding the verdict, namely that the city had “ratified” the shooting officer’s conduct by “clearing him and finding that he had acted in accordance with the police department’s policies.” Thus, the First Circuit was “unconvinced that a failure to discipline [him] or other officers amounts to the sort of ratification from which a jury properly could infer

169 Id. at 331.
170 777 F.2d 801 (1st Cir. 1985).
171 Id. at 809.
municipal policy.”

d. The Converse of Ratification

Ratification is an issue in § 1983 cases only when an entity or supervisor affirms prior conduct of a subordinate. We have considered the example of a police internal affairs report clearing an officer of misconduct charges. If the conduct turns out to be unlawful, the question becomes whether the entity or supervisor has ratified the misconduct by affirming it.

Obviously, if the entity or supervisor disavows the prior conduct of the subordinate, there is no ratification. However, the disavowal (such as a police internal affairs report sustaining misconduct charges) may be admissible in evidence under Fed. R. Evid. 803(8)(c) as a report that contains factual findings and “result[s] from an investigation made pursuant to authority granted by law.” The elements of a Rule 803(8)(c) report are discussed in Beech Aircraft Corp. v. Rainey. 173

Fed. R. Evid. 803(8)(c) allows the admission into evidence of:

Records, reports, statements, or data compilations, in any form of public offices or agencies, setting forth . . . (c) in civil actions and proceedings . . . factual findings resulting from an investigation made pursuant to authority

---

172 Id. at 809 n.7. See also Montaño v. City of Chicago, 535 F.3d 558, 570 (7th Cir. 2008) (“decision of Chicago Police Board that overturned the suspension of an officer” accused of excessive force because “the Board concluded that the forced used . . . was justified . . . hardly establishes a general policy of condoning the use of excessive force”; circumstances indicated that the Board’s decision was correct); Thomas v. City of Chattanooga, 398 F.3d 426, 430-34 (6th Cir. 2005) (internal affairs conclusion that “shooting was justified” did not establish a “policy, custom, or practice of condoning the use of excessive force against suspects”).

granted by law, unless the sources of information or other circumstances indicate lack of trustworthiness.

There is precedent for the admission of reports sustaining allegations of law enforcement misconduct.\textsuperscript{174}

Internal affairs reports sustaining charges of misconduct may also be admissible under Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2) as admissions of a party opponent.

In some cases, this may create for lucky plaintiffs a nightmare dilemma for an entity or supervisor. The dilemma may take this form: (1) issue an internal affairs report clearing a subordinate officer’s conduct and face potential liability based on ratification, or (2) issue an internal affairs report sustaining or upholding a charge against an officer and see that report potentially admitted in evidence against the entity or supervisor under Fed. R. Evid. 803(8)(c) or 801(d)(2).

\textbf{D. CONCLUSION}

As shown, ratification liability under § 1983 presents a number of difficulties. The elements of ratification, even for tort and contract law purposes, are narrow. Moreover, ratification liability is in fundamental tension with the strict causation requirement under § 1983. As a result, the courts have not resoundingly embraced ratification as a theory of § 1983 liability. In short, they have not treated Praprotnik as a clarion call for a new plaintiffs’ beachhead in civil rights law.

\textsuperscript{174}See Meriwether v. Coughlin, 879 F.2d 1037, 1039 (2d Cir. 1989) (under Rule 803(8)(c) commission report admitted entitled “Corruption and Abuses in the Correctional System: The Green Haven Correctional Facility,” which concluded there was widespread and institutionalized corruption among correctional staff); Gentile v. County of Suffolk, 129 F.R.D. 435, 447-62 (E.D. N.Y. 1990), aff’d, 926 F.2d 142, 151-52 (2nd Cir. 1991) (commission report regarding misconduct by county police department and district attorney admissible under Rule 803(8)(c)).

Nevertheless, full respect for Praprotnik indicates that ratification, which by its nature involves post-event affirmance, should be a viable theory of § 1983 liability. Ratification is a well-recognized theory of liability in tort and contract law, which also require strict proof of causation. If ratification is good enough for in those areas of law, it is also good enough for civil rights law. Ratification is simply one mechanism for making sure that plaintiffs are treated justly and defendants incur the rightful consequences of their conduct.