Preparing Your Witness: Do’s and Don’ts

J. Palmer Lockard II
Preventing Prejudice: Do’s and Don’ts

By Palmer Lockard

Effective witness preparation begins when you find the best witnesses for your case. No matter how well you prepare your witnesses, if other witnesses could have presented more compelling testimony, you have not done your best. Find witnesses who can provide testimony in the most favorable manner. For example, do not call a convicted felon if a priest could provide the same testimony.

You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet that witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. The witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are. You should not conduct plenary interviews of every prospective witness the first time that you meet a witness. At this stage, you are still discovering who your friends are.