Relying on morality

Posted By Judith Reisman On 06/26/2000 @ 1:00 am

The Moral Man's public acts will accurately reflect his private life.

The Immoral Man commonly conspires with the devil in secret, all the better to betray the weak to the strong, the common folk to a shadow government, the child to the brigand.

Just so, the knave and the fool alike artlessly ask, "Why should his morals matter if he does his job well?"

Consider, most of the conduct by our authorities which enlarges or constricts our liberty, endangering us and our loved ones in war and peace, really occurs in private. When a "respectable" man is immoral he will publicly proclaim his devotion to God, country and family, while he privately steals our national treasures and offers our water and air at secret yard sales.

Can an immoral man serve rightly in a job dependent upon the public trust? Consider. We rely on the morality of the butcher when he says the meat he sells is disease-free. We rely on the morality of our pharmaceutical companies when they report their pills and nostrums are safe and salutary and on the morality of the FDA when its bureaucrats claim they never approve — or restrict — a drug to satisfy powerful special interests.

We rely on the morality of our doctors when they insist that the multiple, and even dangerous vaccines mandated for our babies, including the flimsily tested Hepatitis B vaccine — are critical for their health. We rely on the morality of our military leaders when they risk our sons and daughters on foreign soil to battle evil for unseen robber barons.

We rely on the morality of our politicians when they swear they'd never betray our founding principles for a handful of silver, while they rely on the immorality of our teachers, when they instruct our children in heterosexual and homosexual deviance — financed by our hard-earned taxes.

We rely on the morality of our police force when they claim to war on organized crime. We rely on the morality of the FBI when they call Ruby Ridge and Waco regrettable errors. We rely on the morality of our attorneys general when they say they are vigorously assailing (but barely prosecuting) the thriving child pornography industry. We rely on the morality of our clergy when they reject Scripture while building larger temples of worship in which to celebrate a politically correct theology.

We rely on the morality of our judiciary when they permit predators to regain custody of the children they confess to have victimized, freedom of speech protection for images which celebrate and imbed images of hate, torture and murder, while banning prayer in public space and America's historic, founding law orders because they include the Ten Commandments. So too, we rely on the morality of our parole boards when they release serial-rapists and even murderers back onto our streets within a few years of their convictions.

We rely on the morality of our farmers when they say they used no harmful sprays on our foods. We rely on the morality of our scientists and scholars when they claim theirs is honest, unbiased research and that they would never allow the murder of the unborn if the child felt pain, or the sale of unborn baby body parts for money or fame.

We rely on the morality of our media when billionaire film and TV moguls insist their vicious and vacuous products do not coarsen or destroy. We rely on the morality of our reporters when they spike frequent crime reports of gay-on-gay violence, the misanthropic spread of AIDS and the thousands of annual rapes and murders of children and women triggered by their own pornoviolent media. And, we rely on the morality of the American Psychiatric Association when it rules sadism, homosexuality and pedophilia are not necessarily contagious, dissolute behaviors. Then too, we rely on the morality of the American Library Association — a Playboy-funded trade union — when they deny that the pornography which they allow to flood into our libraries is not feeding rapists, mutilators and killers of children and women.

But for the dread that there may just be a just God who will burn them in Hell for lying, cheating, stealing, taking and giving bribes, polluting, raping and murdering, how many of those upon whose morality we rely would sell our children for a few pieces of silver?

President George Washington said religion and morality are the indispensable supports for our republican way of life. Without the collective fear of Divine Retribution what fool believes our nation can maintain the morality and civility that makes life worth living?
