Heyns's 2013 argument that all states should declare moratoria on lethal autonomous robots (argument map)

Michael H.G. Hoffmann
therefore (modus ponens)

Particular AU: Michael Hoffmann

we do not yet know whether there is such an international agreement if the use of LARs can be justified only if there is international agreement on the question "whether machines should be permitted to decide whether human beings live or die" and if we do not yet know whether there is such an international agreement, then "The Human Rights Council should call on all States to declare and implement national moratoria on at least the testing, production, assembly, transfer, acquisition, deployment and use of LARs until such time as an internationally agreed upon framework on the future of LARs has been established" (p. 21)