Public and Private School Administration: An Overview in Christian Perspective

Samuel J. Smith (Editor), Liberty University
James A. Swezey (Editor), Liberty University
CONTENTS

Introduction v
About the Authors ix

VISION: THE DRIVING FORCE

Chapter 1 Creating and Communicating a Shared Vision 1
Chapter 2 School Improvement: Data Driven and Vision Centered 18

INSTRUCTIONAL LEADERSHIP

Chapter 3 Cultivating Learning: A Culture of Success 39
Chapter 4 Leading Curriculum Development 59
Chapter 5 Developing a School’s Greatest Asset: The Faculty 73

ORGANIZATIONAL MANAGEMENT

Chapter 6 Resource Acquisition and Stewardship 87
Chapter 7 Organizational Management: Distributed Leadership in Action 105
Chapter 8 Proactive Measures for School Safety 121

ADVOCACY, NEGOTIATION, AND PARTNERSHIPS

Chapter 9 Partnering with the Community 141
Chapter 10 Political and Legal Context 159
Chapter 11 Beyond Reproach: Ethics in School Administration 181
About the Authors

Beth E. Ackerman is Associate Dean of Liberty University’s School of Education. She has taught special education in both public and private schools and has served as a principal of a school for students with severe emotional and behavioral disabilities. Her publications include a variety of journal articles and books on behavior management, differentiated instruction, learning partnerships, life skills, and computer-assisted instruction. As a featured conference speaker she has presented on a variety of topics. She holds degrees from the University of Virginia, Lynchburg College, and Liberty University.

Mark A. Angle is Assistant Professor at Liberty University. He has taught and served as a principal of both elementary and middle schools and has also been a central office administrator. He has authored and presented on such topics as writing across the curriculum, differentiating with gender in mind, parent–school relationships, and global collaboration. Most recently his research has focused on improving preparation of teacher candidates by integrating educational psychology, assessment, and technology into a single blended course. He holds degrees from Concord University and the University of Virginia.

John C. Bartlett is Assistant Professor at Liberty University, where he teaches courses in school finance, resource management, and educational leadership. He also supervises internships in school administration. He has served as a public school principal in Knoxville, Tennessee, and has authored and presented on topics such as instructional improvement, school culture, brain-based research, instructional technology, school leadership principles, and philosophy of education. He holds degrees from Tennessee Temple University, Tennessee Technological University, and Liberty University.

Andrea P. Beam is the Director of Liberty University’s Secondary Education Licensure Programs. She has taught in public school special education and has been an administrator in elementary and secondary schools in Virginia Beach. Presently, she teaches courses in special education, school law, and educational leadership and has published on the topics of inclusion, leadership, Brain Gym, school improvement plans, business programs for special education students, and differentiation. She holds degrees from George Washington University, Norfolk State University, and Old Dominion University.

Russell L. Claxton is a Department Chair in Liberty University’s School of Education. He has been a coach, teacher of business education, and a principal at both middle and high school levels in the Atlanta, Georgia, area. Presently, he teaches educational leadership. His presentations and publications address such topics as middle-to-high school transition programs, high-achieving high-poverty schools, bullying, positive behavior support, and assessment. He holds degrees from the University of Georgia, the University of West Georgia, and Liberty University.
x About the Authors

Shanté Moore-Austin is an Assistant Professor of Education at Liberty University. She has been a teacher of mathematics in secondary education on the Eastern Shore of Virginia. Presently, she teaches courses in educational leadership and mathematics. She has published articles and given presentations at national conferences on topics such as promoting diversity in higher education, partnering with the community, and the impact of parent and community involvement on the academic success of students. She holds degrees from the University of Virginia, Regent University, and Capella University.

Leldon W. Nichols is an Associate Professor of Education at Liberty University and has leadership experience in elementary, secondary, and higher education. His publications include writing, editing, and producing numerous continuing education programs of study. He has been a keynote speaker for education and leadership conferences in the United States and in seven foreign countries. He holds degrees from Tennessee Temple University, the University of Alabama, and the University of Tennessee.

Connie L. Pearson is a Department Chair in Liberty University’s School of Education. In addition to her experience teaching and administrating elementary through secondary schools in both public and private sectors, she has been a college dean, university vice president, and accreditation commission officer. As an author and international conference speaker, she has addressed topics of teaching pedagogy, gender research, classroom management, differentiated instruction, and educational philosophy. She holds degrees from the University of Tennessee, Illinois State University, and Tennessee Temple University.

Samuel J. Smith is the Director of Liberty University’s School Administration Licensure Program and teaches historical and philosophical foundations of education. He has taught in both public and Christian schools and served as a P-12 administrator in Texas and Florida. His publications include book chapters and articles on topics such as principal preparation, high-poverty schools, moral education, the phenomenon of teaching as a calling, religious rights in public schools, and special education in Christian schools. He holds degrees from Oklahoma State University, Grace Theological Seminary, and Mid-America Christian University.

James A. Sweezy is a Research Consultant and Associate Professor of Educational Leadership at Liberty University. In addition to serving as a Christian school administrator, he has been a high school history and Bible teacher and a combat survival instructor for the U.S. Air Force. His publications include book chapters and articles on religion in public schools, worldview, school safety, teacher professionalism, professional development, and the history of the Association of Christian Schools International. He holds degrees from George Fox University, Columbia International University, Simpson University, and the Community College of the Air Force.