I am happy to answer inquiries in regard to how I calculated my citation counts and also to suggest how others should fairly count citations.

Write me at: sbarretttillman@yahoo.com.

Where multiple versions of otherwise identical journal articles cite a Tillman-authored publication, only the most recent version of the article is counted. Where multiple versions or editions of otherwise identical reports, books, etc. cite a Tillman-authored publication, only one version or edition of the report, book, etc. is counted.

However, a report, book, etc. initially published under one author’s name, but republished under another author’s name or in a new language will be counted twice.
Likewise, an article published in a journal and then republished in a book (or vice versa) will be counted twice. Similarly, a conference paper later published in a journal, in the same or similar form, is counted twice.

Finally, each separate section of a multi-section treatise citing a Tillman-authored publication is counted individually. Such treatises include: (i) Rotunda & Nowak’s Treatise on Constitutional Law: Substance and Procedure, and (ii) Forte & Spalding’s The Heritage Guide to the Constitution.

ii A citation is “Extant” if a draft is publicly available, even if not in final form. Drafts posted on SSRN are “Extant.”

iii 2013 and 2014 are my two most productive years for citations.

iv A citation is “Forthcoming”: (i) if I have seen a draft version (which is not publicly available); or (ii) if I have received substantial personal assurance from the third-party author that his or her publication will include one or more citations to a Tillman-authored publication (or will acknowledge me personally). By contrast, a citation is “Extant” if the third-party publication (or draft publication) has already been printed, published, or placed on line (in final or draft form). (When I report citation totals, I do not include citations in the “Forthcoming” category.)

v A citation is “Expected or Planned” if I have good cause to believe when the publication is published it will include one or more citations to a Tillman-authored publication. (When I report citation totals, I do not include citations in this “Expected or Planned” category.)

vi See supra notes iv & v. Counting all “Extant” citations. Citation totals do not include citations in the “Forthcoming” category. Citation totals do not include citations in the “Expected or Planned” category.

vii See supra notes iv & v. Again, citation totals do not include citations in the “Forthcoming” category. Citation totals do not include citations in the “Expected or Planned” category. Finally, third-party working papers which have not yet been accepted for publication or published at a journal are categorized as non-journal citations.
