National University of Ireland, Maynooth

From the SelectedWorks of Seth Barrett Tillman

February 14, 2013

Seth Barrett Tillman

Available at: https://works.bepress.com/seth_barrett_tillman/305/
The Constitution is strikingly silent on many issues central to the structure of the democratic process; yet that silence has not stopped courts from intervening in the reapportionment or racial-gerrymandering contexts. In much the same way that the Supreme Court has given force to structural values in the Constitution such as federalism and the separation of powers, the Court could recognize the structural commitment to fiduciary government as the basis for judicial review of incumbent self-dealing.