cases of influenza A (H1N1) infection, also known as swine flu, have stretched the Western world. The first cases of swine flu were confirmed in Mexico on April 26, 2009. The virus spread rapidly across the Americas, Europe, and Asia, and by the end of May, it had been confirmed in more than 100 countries. The disease has claimed the lives of hundreds of people worldwide and has had significant economic impacts, causing widespread disruption to travel and tourism. The WHO declared the swine flu a pandemic on June 11, 2009, and it remains a significant public health concern today.
