Azim Premji University

From the SelectedWorks of Vikas Kumar

March 22, 2016

Wooing Tribes in Assam: Will it help BJP?

Vikas Kumar

Available at: https://works.bepress.com/vikas_kumar/219/
Nationality a slogan/

A new style and idiom of nationalism is being preached and forcefed upon the country in the name of society and duty. It is not a new phenomenon, but another wave of a relentless campaign and effort to shape every individual in the country into one image. This, indeed, is a worrying trend.

The Indian is run out of the country in kitchens, dressing rooms, and homes—of course, not in the traditional sense, by those who should eat, wear, and talk; but now by the so-called experts, extracting the very soul of the Indian. These experts have set about destroying the very essence of Indian culture. For instance, they dictate what one should eat, wear, and talk. They are now assembling a new country which is not only economically viable but also environmentally friendly. The new India will be free from the past, and it will be run by a new set of experts.

However, the experts are still not satisfied. They want to make the Indian into a new person, one who is not only economically viable but also environmentally friendly. They want to make the Indian into a new person, one who is not only economically viable but also environmentally friendly. They want to make the Indian into a new person, one who is not only economically viable but also environmentally friendly.

The experts are making the Indian into a new person, one who is not only economically viable but also environmentally friendly. They want to make the Indian into a new person, one who is not only economically viable but also environmentally friendly. They want to make the Indian into a new person, one who is not only economically viable but also environmentally friendly.

It is not a new phenomenon, but another wave of a relentless campaign and effort to shape every individual in the country into one image. This, indeed, is a worrying trend.