March 26, 2017

Lack of clear policy leads to silence on the Baloch front

Vikas Kumar
T he reference to Balochistan in the prime minister’s 2016 Address at the United Nations (UN) was a possible Indian signal to Pakistan’s rulers: the prime minister had some specific issues on his mind. However, the reference was short and the actuality of the message was not clear.

Why did the government fail to sustain public attention? The Brussels attacks happened after the prime minister made his powerful speech at the UN, and thus dashed any hope that the issue of Kashmir had any chance to be discussed in UN forums. The issue of Balochistan was not a high priority for the UN and was not taken up on the agenda of the UN.

In the aftermath of the 2016 UN address, Prime Minister Narendra Modi visited the US and UK, and the visit of the US President to India has been most important for the Indian government as it has significantly elevated the status and profile of India in the world. However, the issue of Balochistan has not been a high priority for the US and UK governments as they have not raised any issue related to Balochistan in their meetings with the Indian prime minister.

The issue of Balochistan has not generated much attention in the Indian media, and most of the newspapers and news channels have not given much coverage to the issue. The issue has been ignored by the Indian government as it is not a high priority for them.

In the absence of a high-priority policy, the Indian government has not taken any concrete steps to address the issue of Balochistan. The Indian government has not provided any help to the Baloch people, and has not taken any action against Pakistan’s role in supporting Baloch insurgency.

In conclusion, the issue of Balochistan has not been a priority for the Indian government and has not generated much attention in the Indian media. The issue has been ignored by the Indian government as it is not a high priority for them.

***

India Must Act on Pakistan's Plans to Make Gilgit-Baltistan the Fifth Province

By Vikas Kumar

Lack of Clear Policy Leads to Silence on the Baloch Front

The government's silence on the Baloch Front is not only a failure of policy but also a failure of leadership. The government has failed to take any concrete steps to address the issue of Balochistan.

In the absence of a high-priority policy, the Indian government has not taken any concrete steps to address the issue of Balochistan. The Indian government has not provided any help to the Baloch people, and has not taken any action against Pakistan's role in supporting Baloch insurgency.

In conclusion, the issue of Balochistan has not been a priority for the Indian government and has not generated much attention in the Indian media. The issue has been ignored by the Indian government as it is not a high priority for them.

***

SECURITY SCAN

By Maj. Gen. (Rtd.) K.D. B Doshi

Who does own poetry? The person who creates it? Or those who make it a part of the living air, a common legacy which with give to DARNAK and Thus, to whom does the flame belong? To the flower, or to the passing traveler enraptured by its scent?

The Baloch people have a centuries-old tradition of poetry. The Baloch poets, known as ‘Dhokh’, have a unique style of expressing their emotions and sentiments through poetry. The Baloch poets have a deep connection with nature and their poetry reflects their love for the land and people.

In conclusion, the Baloch people have a centuries-old tradition of poetry. The Baloch poets, known as ‘Dhokh’, have a unique style of expressing their emotions and sentiments through poetry. The Baloch poets have a deep connection with nature and their poetry reflects their love for the land and people.