No Good Deed Goes Unpunished: Charitable Contributions and the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act

William Alan Nelson, II
No Good Deed Goes Unpunished: Charitable Contributions and the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act

By
William Alan Nelson II, Esq.

B.S., May 2004, University of Tulsa
J.D., with Honor, May 2007, University of Tulsa College of Law
LL.M. in International and Comparative Law, May 2008, George Washington University Law School

Professorial Lecturer in Law, George Washington University Law School
Attorney-Advisor / Judicial Law Clerk, Board of Veterans’ Appeals, Department of Veterans Affairs
Articles Editor, Veterans Law Review
Managing Associate Editor, Wealth Strategies Journal
Member, Legal Writing Institute

William Alan Nelson II, Esq.
565 Pennsylvania Ave., NW #607
Washington, DC  20001
Table of Contents

I. Introduction.........................................................................................................................4

II. Foreign Corrupt Practices Act..........................................................................................5

   A. Background of the FCPA...............................................................................................5

   B. Provisions of the FCPA...............................................................................................6

      1. Anti-Bribery Provisions............................................................................................6

         a. “Corrupt” Intent....................................................................................................7

         b. “Anything of Value”..............................................................................................8

         c. “Knowledge” Requirement...................................................................................9

         d. “Foreign Official”...................................................................................................9

         e. “Obtain or Retain” Business................................................................................12

      2. Record-Keeping Provisions......................................................................................12

      3. Exceptions and Affirmative Defenses.......................................................................13

      4. Enforcement and Penalties......................................................................................14

III. Charitable Giving and the FCPA...................................................................................15

   A. In re Schering-Plough ..................................................................................................16

   B. Wynn Resorts..............................................................................................................21

   C. DOJ FCPA Review Opinion Procedure Releases...................................................23

      1. FCPA Review Opinion Procedure Release 95-01..................................................24

      2. FCPA Review Opinion Procedure Release 97-02..................................................25

      3. FCPA Review Opinion Procedure Release 06-01..................................................26

      4. FCPA Review Opinion Procedure Release 09-01..................................................28

      5. FCPA Review Opinion Procedure Release 10-02..................................................30
D. What We Have Learned

1. No Officials of Charity Affiliated with Foreign Government
2. Payments Made Directly to Foreign Government
3. Control and Monitoring of Charitable Contributions
4. “Compelled Giving” Laws

IV. Corporate Social Responsibility

A. FCPA’s Effect on Charitable Contributions
B. Companies Using Corporate Social Responsibility to Disguise Bribery

1. “Corrupt” Intent
3. Contributions to Domestic Charity Involved in Charitable Foreign Activities
4. Corporate Social Responsibility Used to Disguise Bribery: Hypothetical Situations

V. Minimizing Liability

A. FCPA Compliance Program
1. Proposed Model for Charitable Contributions Compliance Program
   a. Elements
   b. Charitable Contributions Compliance Committee
   c. Whistleblower Protection Program
B. Due Diligence

VI. Conclusion
No Good Deed Goes Unpunished: Charitable Contributions and the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act

I. INTRODUCTION

The Foreign Corrupt Practices Act (“FCPA”) was signed into law in December of 1977.\(^1\) Congress believed that the corporate bribery scandals during the early 1970’s shook public confidence in American corporations.\(^2\) Following inquiries by the U.S. Senate and the Securities Exchange Commission (“SEC”)\(^3\) Congress, concerned that the disclosure of these dishonest corporate practices would seriously undermine public confidence in the American business community, enacted the FCPA.\(^4\)

This article examines the effect of the FCPA on companies’ contributions to charitable organizations. Part II reviews the background of the FCPA and discusses the elements of a FCPA violation. Congress tasked two agencies, the DOJ and the SEC, with authority to enforce the FCPA. Part III examines the SEC’s recent civil enforcement action concerning charitable giving under the FCPA. It also analyzes a handful of advisory opinions issued by the DOJ regarding charitable giving and the FCPA. Part IV considers corporate social responsibility in the context of FCPA enforcement. It provides hypothetical situations illustrating companies’ use of corporate social responsibility to disguise acts of bribery and examines any “chilling effect”

---

2 Pamela J. Jadwin & Monica Shilling, Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, 31 AM. CRIM. L. REV. 677, 678 (1994). An example of corruption that the FCPA was enacted to curtail was a $1.4 million dollar bribe that Lockheed gave to the Prime Minister of Japan; this bribe resulted in the conviction and imprisonment of the Japanese Prime Minister. Id. at 677 n.3. Also, “payments by Lockheed, Exxon, Mobil, Gulf and other corporations to the Italian Government caused the Italian President to resign and strained United States relations with Italy.” Laura E. Longobardi, Reviewing the Situation: What is to be Done with the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, 20 VAND. J. TRANSNAT’L L. 431, 433 (1987).
3 Jadwin & Shilling, supra note 2, at 677-78.
4 Id. at 677 n.4 (noting that “of 97 companies listed in the final SEC report, 77 admitted to or were suspected of questionable or outright illegal payments to foreign political or commercial interests.”).
that the FCPA has on companies’ charitable giving. Part V proposes a model FPCA compliance program, including the creation of a Charitable Contributions Compliance Committee, to address charitable donations as an area of risk. It also provides a roadmap for the due diligence required to minimize liability under the FCPA for companies making charitable contributions.

II. THE FOREIGN CORRUPT PRACTICES ACT

A. Background of the FCPA

During the Watergate investigation into President Nixon’s campaign contributions, a widespread practice of bribery by U.S. companies to obtain business in foreign countries was uncovered. Politicians feared that this practice “would undermine[] public confidence in the business community and tarnish[] America’s image abroad.”

For example, after the Prime Minister of Japan accepted payments by Lockheed Corp., he was forced to resign. Reports also showed that Lockheed Corp. paid Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands $1 million dollars; the ensuing scandal eventually compelled him to relinquish his 5 See Barbara Crutchfield George et al., On the Threshold of the Adoption of Global Antibribery Legislation: A Critical Analysis of Current Domestic and International Efforts Toward the Reduction of Business Corruption, 32 VAND. J. TRANSNAT’L L. 1, 5 (1999); see also S. REP. NO. 95-114, 3 (1977), reprinted in 1977 U.S.C.C.A.N. 4098 (noting that SEC investigations at the time the report revealed corrupt payments by over 300 US companies involving hundreds of millions of dollars); Thomas McSorley, Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, 48 AM. CRIM. L. REV. 749 (noting that “[t]he FCPA is also the byproduct of the Watergate Scandal: after discovering unreported campaign contributions, the SEC initiated an investigation into payments to domestic and foreign political officials by corporations.”).

6 Jadwin & Shilling, supra note 2, at 678.

7 Id. “Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka, and other high government officials were toppled from power amid revelations of approximately $12 million in illegal payoffs from the Lockheed corporation, which were paid since the 1950’s to secure airplane sales contracts from the Japanese government.” Bruce A. Gagert, Yakuza: The Warlords of Japanese Organized Crime, 4 ANN. SURV. INT’L & COMP. L. 147, 160 (1997).
official functions.\(^8\) The extensive media coverage of these events led the SEC to investigate a number of companies and to institute a voluntary disclosure program.\(^9\)

The FCPA was enacted to “bring [] corrupt practices to a halt and to restore public confidence in the integrity of the American business system.”\(^10\) A 1977 Senate Report, discussing the enactment of the FCPA, stated that “[c]orporate bribery is bad business.”\(^11\) This Senate report, along with the reports of widespread corrupt payments by corporations, reflects why the FCPA was needed to curb corporate bribery, and restore the confidence of investors in America and abroad.\(^12\)

B. Provisions of the FCPA

The FCPA is composed of “accounting and record-keeping provisions” and “anti-bribery provisions.”\(^13\)

The FCPA’s anti-bribery provisions, found in 15 U.S.C. §§ 78dd-1, 78dd-2 and 78dd-3,\(^14\) prohibits “any promise, offer, or payment of anything of value if the offeror ‘knows’ that any \(^8\) Longobardi, supra note 2, at 433.

\(^9\) Id. “In the 1970s, the SEC announced its ‘voluntary disclosure program’ concerning the suspected widespread practice of public companies maintaining ‘off the books’ slush funds, which were used to make payments ... [to] government officials in business transactions.” William R. McLucas, et al., The Decline of the Attorney-Client Privilege in the Corporate Setting, 96 J. CRIM. L. & CRIMINOLOGY 621, 624 (2006). “The results were stunning: hundreds of U.S corporations came forward with disclosures about the existence of such funds and the use of these ‘off the books’ accounts to facilitate all manner of questionable payments.” Id.
\(^11\) Id., at 4.
portion will be offered, given, or promised to a foreign official, foreign political party, or candidate for public office for the purpose of influencing a governmental decision.”

a. “Corrupt” Intent

For a payment to violate the FCPA, it must be given “corruptly.” The term “corruptly” is not specifically defined in the FCPA, but the legislative history of the Act provides some guidance. The legislative history signifies that Congress viewed the term “corruptly” to connote an action that was done with a bad intent. In a 1977 House Report, Congress stated that the word “corruptly” in the FCPA is intended to have the same meaning as in 18 U.S.C. § 201, which is the federal statute criminalizing the bribing of a federal official.

A seminal case that analyzes the meaning of the term “corruptly” under the FCPA is United States v. Liebo. In Liebo, the defendant (Liebo) was convicted for violating the FCPA because he gave a Niger government official airline tickets for his honeymoon in order to 19 Id. at 7. The statute states whoever: “directly or indirectly, corruptly gives, offers or promises anything of value to any public official … with intent (A) to influence any official act; or (B) to influence such public official … to commit or aid in committing, or collude in, or allow, any fraud, or make opportunity for the commission of any fraud, on the United States; or (C) to induce such public official … to do or omit to do any act in violation of the lawful duty of such official or person.” David A. Gantz, The Foreign Corrupt Practices Act: Professional and Ethical Challenges for Lawyers, 14 Ariz. Int’l & Comp. L. 97, 106-07 (1997) (quoting 18 U.S.C. § 201(b) (2006)); see also United States v. Rooney, 37 F.3d 847, 852 (2d Cir. 1994) (“a fundamental component of a ‘corrupt’ act is a breach of some official duty owed to the government or the public at large.”); United States v. Zacher, 586 F.2d 912, 915 (2d Cir. 1978) (“[t]he common thread that runs through common law and statutory formulations of the crime of bribery is the element of corruption, breach of trust, or violation of duty.”).

---

20 United States v. Liebo, 923 F.2d 1308 (8th Cir. 1991).
influence another official who was the relative and friend of the Niger official.\textsuperscript{21} The Court found that there was sufficient evidence that these tickets were given to “obtain or retain business.”\textsuperscript{22} The relevant evidence included the fact that Liebo classified the airline ticket as a “commission payment for accounting purposes.”\textsuperscript{23}

The District Court judge instructed the jury that: “the offer, promise to pay, payment or authorization of payment, must be intended to induce the recipient to misuse his official position or to influence someone else to do so,” and that “an act is ‘corruptly’ done if done voluntarily and intentionally, and with a bad purpose of accomplishing either an unlawful end or result, or a lawful end or result by some unlawful method or means.”\textsuperscript{24} The Eighth Circuit held that “the instructions as a whole adequately instructed the jury that a gift or gratuity does not violate the [FCPA] unless it is given ‘corruptly.’”\textsuperscript{25}

b. “Anything of Value”

“The term ‘anything of value’ has been defined primarily by case law.”\textsuperscript{26} Federal courts have consistently given broad meaning to the phrase “anything of value” in interpreting federal criminal statutes.\textsuperscript{27} It is important for companies to recognize that there does not have to be a \textsuperscript{22} Liebo, 923 F.2d at 1311.

\textsuperscript{23} Id. at 1312.
\textsuperscript{24} Id. (citing Tr. At 166-67).
\textsuperscript{25} Id.
\textsuperscript{27} See, e.g., United States v. Gorman, 807 F.2d 1299, 1305 (6th Cir. 1986); see also INSTRUCTIONS FOR PARTICULAR FEDERAL CRIMINAL CASES § 27:10 ("Anything of value" means "any item, whether tangible or intangible, that the person giving or offering or the person demanding or receiving considers to be worth something . . . Includ[ing] a sum of money, favorable treatment, a job, or special consideration").
direct monetary benefit to the foreign official for a FCPA violation to occur.28 “Items found to be ‘of value’ include the following: money; gifts; charitable contributions; discount; use of resources (materials, facilities, and equipment); entertainment; luxuries (food, travel, meals, lodging); promises for future employment; and insurance benefits.”29

c. “Knowledge” Requirement

The “knowledge” requirement, in respect to conduct, is met when that person is aware or has a firm belief that he or she is making an improper payment.30 The “knowing” standard is broad and does not necessarily require “actual” knowledge.31 The legislative history of the FCPA shows that recklessness is not enough for the “knowledge requirement;” however, “willful blindness” will be seen as meeting the “knowledge requirement.”32

d. “Foreign Official”

The term “foreign official” is defined in the FCPA as “any officer or employee of a foreign government, or any department, agency, or instrumentality thereof, or of a public international organization, or any person acting in an official capacity for or on behalf of any 29 Id. at 658.

31 United States v. Reyes, 302 F.3d 48, 54 (2d Cir. 2002) (finding that the defendant has sufficient knowledge of the conspiracy even though he consciously avoided actual knowledge of the purposes and objectives of the conspiracy).

32 See H.R. REP. NO. 100-576 (1988) (Conf. Rep.), reprinted in 1988 U.S.C.C.A.N. 1547 (The knowing standard includes “[b]oth prohibited action taken with 'actual knowledge' of intended results as well as other actions that, while falling short of what the law terms 'positive knowledge,' nevertheless demonstrates evidence of a conscious disregard or deliberate ignorance of known circumstances that should reasonably alert one to high probability of violations of the [FCPA]”).
such government or department.” 33 This term has recently been challenged in regard to whether the FCPA applies to officers and employees of state-owned entities (SOEs). 34 The defendants in these cases argue that the plain language and legislative history of the statute with regard to “instrumentality” excludes SOEs. 35 In Aguilar, U.S. District Judge Howard Matz denied the defendants’ motion to dismiss, concluding that employees of SOEs can be “foreign officials” for purposes of the FCPA. 36 In Carson, U.S. District Judge James Selna denied the defendants’ motion to dismiss and stated that the “ordinary meaning of ‘instrumentality’ indicates that state-owned companies could fall under the ambit of the FCPA. Whether such companies do, in fact, qualify as an instrumentality is a question of fact.” 37 The Court listed a number factors to determine whether a business entity constitutes a government instrumentality including: “(1) the foreign state’s characterization of the SOE and its employees; (2) the degree of control by the 36 See Aguilar, 783 F. Supp. 2d at 1115 (The court held that a state-owned corporation could have been an instrumentality of a foreign government within the meaning of the FCPA. Officers of such a state-owned corporation, as two employees were alleged to be, could have been foreign officials within the meaning of the FCPA.); see also Steven Mikulan & Aruna Viswanatha, Judge Upholds DOJ Definition of “Foreign Official,” MAIN JUSTICE: JUST ANTI-CORRUPTION (Apr. 1, 2011), available at http://www.mainjustice.com/justanticorruption/2011/04/01/judge-upholds-doj-definition-of-foreign-official/.

---

foreign state; (3) the purpose of the entity’s activities; and (4) the extent of government ownership, including level of financial support.”

The Department of Justice has also recently provided guidance on who qualifies as a “foreign official.” In the recently released “Resource Guide to the U.S. Foreign Corrupt Practices Act,” the Department of Justice states that “the FCPA broadly applies to corrupt payments to ‘any’ officer or employee of a foreign government and to those acting on the foreign government’s behalf.” The guide also states that “[t]he term ‘instrumentality’ is broad and can include state-owned or state-controlled entities. Whether a particular entity constitutes an ‘instrumentality’ under the FCPA requires a fact-specific analysis of an entity’s ownership, control, status, and function.” As a guide, companies can assume that based upon the guidance provided by the DOJ, “an entity is unlikely to qualify as an instrumentality if a government does not own or control a majority of its shares.”

The FCPA also includes certain public international organizations. Under the FCPA, a public international organization is defined as (1) “an organization that is designated by Executive Order pursuant to Section 1 of the International Organizations Immunities Act (22

---

40 Id. at 20. For examples of jury instructions relating to what factors courts look at to determine government ownership, see: Jury Instructions, United States v. Esquenazi, No. 09-cr-21010 (S.D. Fla. Aug. 5, 2011), ECF No. 520, Order at 5; and Jury Instructions, Carson, 2011 WL 5101701, ECF No. 373 and ECF No. 549; Aguilar, 783 F. Supp. 2d at 1115.

41 Id. at 21. However, practitioners must be aware that the article also comments on situations where this will not be true. “[A] French issuer’s three subsidiaries were convicted of paying bribes to employees of a Malaysian telecommunications company that was 43% owned by Malaysia’s Ministry of Finance. There, notwithstanding its minority ownership stake in the company, the Ministry held the status of a “special shareholder,” had veto power over all major expenditures, and controlled important operational decisions.” Id.
U.S.C. § 288)” or (2) "any other international organization that is designated by the President by Executive Order for the purposes of this section, effective as of the date of publication of such order in the Federal Register.” 42 Currently, only eighty-three organizations have such designation by Executive Order. 43 The inclusion of public international organizations is particularly important in the context of charitable giving, because organizations such as the International Committee of the Red Cross, the United Nations, and the World Health Organization are subject to FCPA enforcement. 44

e. “Obtain or Retain” Business

Under 15 U.S.C. § 78dd-1(a)(1)(B), there can only be a violation of the FCPA if the payment is made to “obtain or retain” business. The courts have interpreted this statute very broadly; for instance, the Fifth Circuit has found that it applies to obtaining favorable rulings on tax legislation.45

2. Record-Keeping Provisions

The FCPA books and records and internal controls provisions (“record-keeping provisions”)46 only apply to issuers registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (“Exchange Act”)47 and issuers that are required to file reports under 15 U.S.C. § 78o(d).48

45 See United States v. Kay, 359 F.3d 738, 749 (5th Cir. 2004) (“prohibition against payments to foreign officials to obtain or retain business was sufficiently broad to include bribes meant to affect administration of revenue laws”).
46 See 15 U.S.C § 78m(b)(2)-(7).
48 This statute concerns the registration and regulation of brokers and dealers.
Because only issuers are subject to the requirements of the record-keeping provisions, they are not as widely applicable as the anti-bribery provisions.\textsuperscript{49} The record-keeping provisions mandate accountability for the disposition of assets and transactions of issuers.\textsuperscript{50} Another important point is that for an issuer to be liable under the record-keeping provisions of the FCPA, the issuer must have acted “knowingly.”\textsuperscript{51}

3. Exceptions and Affirmative Defenses

The sole exception to the FCPA covers payments made to foreign officials to secure performance of a “routine governmental action.”\textsuperscript{52} The FCPA defines a routine governmental action as one that is ordinarily and commonly performed by a foreign official in: (i) “obtaining permits, licenses, or other official documents to qualify a person to do business in a foreign country;” (ii) “processing governmental papers, such as visas and work orders;” (iii) “providing police protection, mail pick-up and delivery, or scheduling inspections associated with contract performance or inspections related to transit of goods across country;” (iv) “providing phone service, power and water supply, loading and unloading cargo, or protecting perishable products or commodities from deterioration;” or (v) “actions of a similar nature.”\textsuperscript{53} However, the “routine governmental action” exception excludes “any decision by a foreign official whether, or on what terms, to award new business to or to continue business with a particular party, or any action taken by a foreign official involved in the decision-making process to encourage a decision to award new business to or continue business with a particular party.”54

\textsuperscript{50} See Proskauer on International Litigation and Arbitration: Managing, Resolving, and Avoiding Cross-Border Business or Regulatory Disputes, http://www.proskauerguide.com/law_topics/27/II.

\textsuperscript{51} See United States v. Jensen, 532 F.Supp.2d 1187, 1195 (N. D. Cal. 2008) (“Congress merely intended to protect parties who inadvertently violate the Books & Records statute. As a result, a person can be criminally convicted for a Books & Records violation if the government proves that they acted willfully-that is, knowing the falsification to be wrongful, 15 U.S.C. § 78ff(a) - and acted knowingly - that is, deliberately and not by accident.”).

\textsuperscript{52} See Baker, \textit{supra} note 28 at 661.

The affirmative defenses to the FCPA include payments made that are legal under the written laws of the foreign official’s country and payments that are reasonable and bona fide expenditures.55 The first affirmative defense, payments legal under the written laws of the foreign official’s country, can only be raised when the written laws in a foreign official’s country authorize the payment; the defense may not be based on practice or custom.56 To qualify for the affirmative defense of payments that are reasonable and bona fide expenditures, the payment must be directly related to the “promotion, demonstration, or explanation of products or services” or “the execution or performance of a contract with a foreign government or agency thereof.”57 Because these are affirmative defenses they must be pled affirmatively as a defense by a party charged with a FCPA violation and the party must show that the payment meets the requirements to plead an affirmative defense.58

4. Enforcement and Penalties

The enforcement authority for the anti-bribery and record-keeping provisions is divided between the DOJ and the SEC.59 The DOJ is responsible for all criminal and civil enforcement (except with respect to registrants) of the anti-bribery provisions, as well as with criminal 56 See H. REP. No. 100-418 (“[A] payment to a foreign official is ‘lawful under the written laws and regulations of the foreign official's country.’ … The Conferees wish to make clear that the absence of written laws in a foreign official's country would not by itself be sufficient to satisfy this defense.”).

58 McSorley, supra note 5, at n.108 (citing Arthur Aronoff, Foreign Corrupt Practice Act Anti-Bribery
No. 943, 1997) (discussing the burdens of proof for the affirmative defenses)).
enforcement of the record-keeping provisions. The SEC is responsible for civil enforcement of both the anti-bribery and the record-keeping provisions with respect to registrants. There is considerable overlap, and the two enforcement agencies often collaborate on investigations. The critical distinction between the record-keeping provisions and the anti-bribery provisions is the absence of any requirement of knowledge or intent in the record-keeping provisions in order for the government to prove a civil case.

The law imposes criminal and civil penalties on individuals and companies for FCPA violations. A company that commits a criminal violation of the anti-bribery provisions may be fined up to $2 million per violation and is subject to civil penalties of $10,000 per violation. Civil violations of the record-keeping provisions can lead to injunctions and the disgorgement of profits as well as other remedies.

III. CHARITABLE GIVING AND THE FCPA

Corporate philanthropy is very important in the global marketplace. William Ford, Jr., a former CEO of Ford Motor Company, once said that the distinction between a good company and a great company is that “a good company delivers excellent products and services, a great one delivers excellent products and services and strives to make the world a better place.”

---

61 See id.
63 Id. at 142 (citing Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr, Schering Plough Settles FCPA Case with SEC for Payments to Charity Headed by Government Official (June 30, 2004)).
65 15 U.S.C. §§ 78dd-2(g)(1), 78dd3(e)(1), 78ff (c)(1), 78ff c(2).
Many companies seek to be good corporate citizens through gifts to charity and social responsibility projects. The FCPA has implications for corporate charitable giving and social responsibility projects that many multinational companies engage in throughout the world.

A. In re Schering-Plough

The only case to date of an action brought against a company for charitable donations under the FCPA is SEC v. Schering-Plough Corp. The SEC alleged that Schering-Plough Corp. violated the record-keeping provisions of the FCPA. Without admitting or denying the SEC’s allegations, Schering-Plough Corp. consented to a judgment by the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia that required Schering-Plough Corp. to pay a $500,000 dollar civil penalty.

---

68 Faith Stevelman Kahn, Pandora’s Box: Managerial Discretion and the Problem of Corporate Philanthropy, 44 UCLA L. REV. 579, 587 (”[c]orporate charitable contributions amount to several billion dollars in aggregate on an annual basis”).

71 Schering-Plough Corp. is a New Jersey corporation headquartered in Kenilworth, New Jersey. Its common stock is registered with the SEC pursuant to Section 12(b) of the Exchange Act and is listed on the New York Stock Exchange.

72 Schering-Plough Complaint, supra note 70, ¶ 2. The complaint specifically alleged Schering-Plough Corp. violated Sections 13(b)(2)(A) and 13(b)(2)(B) of the Exchange Act. Id.

73 In re Schering-Plough Corp., SEC Exchange Act Release No. 34-49838, Accounting and Auditing Enforcement Rel. No. 2032, Admin. Proc. File No. 3-11517 (June 9, 2004) [hereinafter Schering-Plough SEC Release]. Schering-Plough also agreed to hire an independent consultant to review and evaluate Schering-Plough’s internal controls, record-keeping, and financial reporting policies and procedures as they related to the company’s compliance with the FCPA. The independent consultant would be required to issue periodic reports to the SEC on the measures being implemented as related to Schering-Plough’s compliance with the FCPA. Id. § VI.
In February 1999, Schering-Plough Poland ("S-P Poland")\(^74\) made a 3,000 zlotys (PLN) (approximately $777) payment to the Chudow Castle Foundation.\(^75\) The founder and President of the Foundation was the Director of the Silesian Health Fund.\(^76\) In 2000, the Director of the Silesian Health Fund solicited S-P Poland to make additional payments to the Foundation.\(^77\) Between March 2000 and March 2002, S-P Poland’s oncology unit manager arranged for twelve additional payments to the Foundation; some payments were structured so that they were under the manager’s approval limit, apparently for the purpose of obscuring the nature of the payments.\(^78\) The manager also “provided false medical justifications for most of the payments on the documents that he submitted to [S-P Poland’s] finance department.”\(^79\)

The SEC found that between February 1999 and March 2002, S-P Poland paid 315,800 PLN ($75,860) to the Foundation.\(^80\) S-P Poland paid more money to the Foundation than to any other recipient of promotional donations.\(^81\) “During 2000 and 2001, the payments to the Foundation constituted approximately 40% and 20%, respectively, of S-P Poland’s total \(^74\) "Schering-Plough Poland ("S-P Poland"), headquartered in Warsaw, Poland is a branch office of Schering-Plough Central East AG, a wholly owned Swiss subsidiary of Schering-Plough Corp. that is headquartered in Lucerne, Switzerland.” See id. § IIIB.

\(^75\) "Chudow Castle Foundation ("Foundation") is a charitable organization that was established in 1995 to restore castles and other historic sites in the Silesian region of Poland.” Id.

\(^76\) "The Silesian Health Fund was a government body that provided monies for the purchase of pharmaceutical products and influenced the purchase of those products by other entities, such as hospitals, through the allocation of health fund resources.” Id. It is one of sixteen regional government health authorities in Poland. Id. ¶ 5.

\(^77\) Schering-Plough Complaint, supra note 70, ¶ 7.

\(^78\) Id.

\(^79\) Id.

\(^80\) Schering-Plough SEC Release, supra note 73, § II.

\(^81\) Id. § III.
promotional donations budget.” Even more unusual was the fact that the Foundation was the only recipient of such donations that received multiple payments.

The SEC also found that “all of the payments to the Foundation were classified by S-P Poland in its books and records as donations;” however, “while the payments were in fact made to a bona fide charity, they were made to influence the Director of the Silesian Health Fund with respect to the purchase of S-P Poland’s products.”

“During the period in which the payments were being made to the Foundation, S-P Poland’s sales of Intron A and Temodal, two of its oncology products, increased disproportionately compared with sales of those products in other regions of Poland.”

The oncology unit manager did not view the payments as charitable, “but as ‘dues’ that were required to be paid for assistance from the Director of the Silesian Health Fund.”

The SEC also found that prior to March 2002, Schering-Plough Corp.’s policies and procedures for detecting possible FCPA violations by its foreign subsidiaries were inadequate. The policies and procedures did not require employees to conduct any investigation or due diligence prior to making charitable donations to determine whether government officials were affiliated with the recipients, and for this reason, the Director of the Silesian Health Fund’s relationship was never considered by S-P Poland as a potential FCPA issue.

---

82 Schering-Plough Complaint, supra note 70, ¶ 8.
83 Id.
84 Id. ¶ 9.
85 Id. ¶ 10.
86 Id. ¶ 9.
87 Schering-Plough SEC Release, supra note 73, at n.4.
88 Id.
The SEC found that Schering-Plough Corp. should have been alerted to the fact that there were FCPA issues relating to S-P Poland’s donations to the Foundation because: “(1) the Foundation is not a healthcare related entity, yet still received payments; \(^{89}\) (2) the proportion of the payments to the Foundation in relation to the company’s budget for charitable donations; (3) the structuring of the payments by the oncology unit manager that apparently allowed him to exceed his authorization limits; and (4) the President of the Foundation was the Director of the Silesian Health Fund, who had the ability to influence the purchase of S-P Poland’s products by hospitals within the Silesian Health Fund.”\(^{90}\)

The Schering-Plough case is significant for a number of reasons. It is the only case to date where a company was charged with a FCPA violation for making contributions to a charitable organization.\(^ {91}\) The case suggests that companies could be held liable for FCPA violations if they fail to install internal controls to analyze links between government officials and the activities of their foreign subsidiaries, including when making charitable contributions.\(^ {92}\) The case is also significant because the Polish government official did not personally benefit from the payments; all of the donated funds went to the Foundation.\(^ {93}\) The SEC took the view that regardless of whether the Polish government official personally benefitted from the payments, the payments were still improper because of his relationship to the Foundation.\(^ {94}\)

\(^{89}\) S-P Poland’s internal policies provided that promotional donations generally were supposed to be made to healthcare institutions and relate to the practice of medicine. \(\text{Id. at n.5.}\)

\(^{90}\) Schering-Plough Complaint, \(\text{supra}\) note 70, ¶ 13.

\(^{92}\) \(\text{Id at 136.}\)

\(^{93}\) \(\text{Id. at 151.}\)

\(^{94}\) \(\text{Id.}\)
DOJ under the FCPA;\textsuperscript{95} the SEC does not need to prove bribery to bring an action against a company under the record-keeping provisions of the FCPA.\textsuperscript{96}

The \textit{Schering-Plough} case involved payments being made by a foreign subsidiary of a U.S. company.\textsuperscript{97} The SEC found that Schering-Plough Corp.’s policies for detecting possible violations by its foreign subsidiaries were inadequate.\textsuperscript{98} This finding is very important, especially with the number of multinational corporations who have subsidiaries in different countries all throughout the world.\textsuperscript{99} The FCPA imposes the duty to implement internal controls directly on the parent company, allowing the SEC to hold the parent company responsible for any inadequate internal controls at a subsidiary that failed to prevent and detect improper payments.\textsuperscript{100}

The \textit{Schering-Plough} case raises many additional questions concerning the scope of FCPA enforcement in regard to charitable contributions. How will the rationale from \textit{Schering-Plough} be applied to other cases of charitable giving? What if instead of the President, the Polish government official had just been a member of the Board of Directors for the Foundation? What if the Polish government official had no association with the charity, but his spouse or child was a member of the Board of Directors of the Foundation? What if instead of the Director \textsuperscript{95} Id. at 136.

\textsuperscript{96} Id. at 151.

\textsuperscript{97} See Schering-Plough SEC Release, \textit{supra} note 73.

\textsuperscript{98} Id.

of the Silesian Health Fund, the Polish government official was Minister of Education or Minister of Finance?

Under the facts of Schering-Plough, because of the way the payments were structured and reported, it probably would not have made a difference whether the Polish government official served as a Board member rather than the President of the Foundation or even if it was a family member who served as a Board member of the Foundation. The Polish government official was still able to influence the purchasing decisions made by the hospitals within the Silesian Health Fund. If instead of the Director of the Silesian Health Fund, the Polish government official was Minister of Education or Minister of Finance, the payments would probably not have violated the FCPA. If the Polish government official did not have the influence over the purchasing of S-P Poland’s products, and the payments were not made to gain an improper advantage, the payments to the Foundation would not have violated the FCPA.

B. Wynn Resorts

In February 2012, after an investigation by former Nevada Governor Robert Miller and Louis Freeh, the ex-director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Wynn Resorts Ltd. director Kazuo Okada was asked to resign based upon allegations that Okada violated U.S. anti-corruption laws by making cash payments and gifts worth about $110,000 to foreign gambling regulators. Earlier, in January 2012, Okada had “sued Wynn in Nevada seeking information about a $135 million donation to the University of Macau, among other things. Okada called the 101 Giraudo, supra note 74, at 152.

102 Id.
donation inappropriate because the final installment is due in ten years, when Wynn Macau's gaming license is set to expire.”104

On February 8, 2012, “following Mr. Okada’s lawsuit, [Wynn Resorts Ltd.] received a letter from the Salt Lake Regional Office of the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC") requesting that, in connection with an informal inquiry by the SEC, the Company preserve information relating to the donation to the University of Macau, any donations by the Company to any other educational charitable institutions, including the University of Macau Development Foundation, and the Company’s casino or concession gaming licenses or renewals in Macau.”105 In the February 2012 SEC filing, Wynn stated that the donation “was consistent with the Company’s longstanding practice of providing philanthropic support” and was only made after “an extensive analysis which concluded that the gift was made in accordance with all applicable laws.”106 However, a Wall Street Journal article reported that the Board of the University foundation includes “current and former government officials” and “a member of the committee to elect Macau’s chief executive,” who is the chancellor of the university.107

Even though case law reflects that there is no private cause of action for a FCPA claim,108 the Wynn case emphasizes that FCPA investigations can spawn from unrelated civil litigation.

104 Richard L. Cassin, “Wynn Resorts Boots Non-Compliant Director, Shareholder,” Feb. 20, 2012, available at http://www.fcpablog.com/blog/2012/2/20/wynn-resorts-boots-non-compliant-directorshareholder.html.

106 Id.

108 See e.g. Lamb v. Phillip Morris, Inc., 915 F.2d 1024 (6th Cir. 1990).
This example reflects the importance of adequate controls as to charitable donations, which are discussed in detail in this article.\textsuperscript{109}

\textit{C. DOJ FCPA Review Opinion Procedure Releases Regarding Charitable Donations}

The DOJ has issued multiple FCPA Procedure Opinion Releases ("FCPA Opinions")\textsuperscript{110} concerning whether charitable contributions made by companies would violate the FCPA.\textsuperscript{111} The FCPA Opinions state whether or not certain specified prospective conduct would violate the current provisions of the FCPA.\textsuperscript{112} It is important to note that "[t]he entire transaction which is the subject of the request must be an actual – not a hypothetical – transaction but need not involve only prospective conduct. However, a request will not be considered unless that portion of the transaction for which an opinion is sought involves only prospective conduct."\textsuperscript{113}

It is also important to note that a FCPA Opinion will not "bind or obligate any agency other than the DOJ. It will not affect the requesting issuer's or domestic concern's obligations to any other agency, or under any statutory or regulatory provision other than those specifically cited in the particular FCPA Opinion."\textsuperscript{114} The FCPA Opinion "will state only the Attorney \textsuperscript{109} See infra Section V(A).

\textsuperscript{110} See 15 USCS § 78dd-1(e) ("The Attorney General, after consultation with appropriate departments and agencies of the United States and after obtaining the views of all interested persons through public notice and comment procedures, shall establish a procedure to provide responses to specific inquiries by issuers concerning conformance of their conduct with the Department of Justice's present enforcement policy regarding the [provisions of the FCPA]”).

\textsuperscript{111} These opinions may be found at http://www.justice.gov/criminal/fraud/fcpa/opinion/. Since 1993, the DOJ has issued 34 FCPA Opinions. Five of these FCPA Opinions discuss the FCPA implications of prospective charitable contributions. These five opinions are discussed at length in the body of this article.

\textsuperscript{112} See 28 C.F.R. § 80.1 (2012) (The FCPA Opinion Procedure allows “issuers and domestic concerns to obtain an opinion of the Attorney General as to whether certain specified, prospective--not hypothetical--conduct conforms with the Department's present enforcement policy regarding the antibribery provisions of the [FCPA]”).

\textsuperscript{113} 28 C.F.R. § 80.3.

\textsuperscript{114} 28 C.F.R. § 80.11.
General's opinion as to whether the prospective conduct would violate the DOJ's present enforcement policy under [the FCPA]. If the conduct for which an FCPA Opinion is requested is subject to approval by any other agency, such FCPA Opinion shall in no way be taken to indicate the DOJ's views on the legal or factual issues that may be raised before that agency, or in an appeal from the agency's decision.”

For example, if a company requests a FCPA Opinion on a proposed action, even if the DOJ decides not to take action, the company could still face civil or criminal charges brought by another government agency or jurisdiction. In the context of the FCPA, it would most likely be the SEC bringing a claim under the FCPA; it is important to note that the SEC has a lower burden of proof for prosecuting a FCPA violation.

1. DOJ FCPA Review Opinion Release 95-01

The DOJ received a request by a U.S.-based energy company. The energy company planned to acquire and operate a plant in a country in South Asia that lacked modern medical facilities in the region where the plant was located. A modern medical complex was under construction near the plant and the costs of the medical facility were projected to run in excess of one hundred million dollars. Once the acquisition of the plant was completed, the energy company planned to donate $10 million dollars to the medical facility for “construction and equipment” costs.

116 See id.
117 Giraudo, supra note 62, at 143.
119 Id.
120 Id.
121 Id.
The donation would be made through a charitable organization incorporated in the United States and through a public limited liability company located in the South Asian nation (“foreign PLLC”). The energy company represented that it would “require certifications from all officers of the [U.S. charity] and the [foreign PLLC] that none of the funds would be used, promised, or offered in violation of the FCPA.” The energy company also represented that none of the persons employed by or acting on behalf of the charity or foreign PLLC were affiliated with the South Asian government. In addition, the energy company represented that it would require audited financial reports from the U.S. charity, accurately detailing the dispersal of the donated funds. Based upon these facts, the DOJ did not intend to take any enforcement action with respect to the prospective donation for the construction and equipment of the medical facility described in the request.

2. DOJ FCPA Review Opinion Release 97-02

The DOJ received a request by a U.S.-based utility company. The utility company had begun construction of a plant in an Asian country that lacked adequate education facilities in the region where the plant was under construction. An elementary school was being built near the location of the plant, and the costs to build the school were projected to exceed $100,000.

---

122 Id.
123 Id.
124 Id.
125 Id.
126 Id.
128 Id.
129 Id.
130 Id.
The utility company intended to donate $100,000 to the school construction project; the donation would be made “directly to the government entity responsible for the construction and supply of the proposed elementary school.”

The utility company represented that it would “require an agreement from the government entity that the funds would be used solely to construct and supply the elementary school.” The written agreement would set forth other conditions to be met, including “guaranteeing the availability of land, teachers, and administrative personnel for the elementary school, and guaranteeing timely additional funding of the elementary school project in the event of any financial shortfall.” Based upon the fact that the donation would be not be given to any specific foreign official, but instead would be made directly to a government entity, the DOJ opined that the FCPA did not appear to apply to the proposed donation and that it did not intend to take any enforcement action with respect to the prospective donation.

3. DOJ FCPA Review Opinion Release 06-01

The DOJ received a request by a Delaware corporation headquartered in Switzerland (“Delaware Corporation”). The Delaware Corporation sought to “contribute $25,000 to a regional Customs Department of the Ministry of Finance (“Ministry”) in an African country as part of a pilot project to improve local enforcement of anti-counterfeiting laws.” The Delaware Corporation sought to make the monetary contribution to the Ministry in order for the 131 Id.

132 Id.
133 Id.
134 Id.
136 Id.
137 Id.
agency to “fund incentive awards to local customs officials to improve local enforcement relating to seizures of counterfeit products bearing the trademarks of the [Delaware Corporation] and its competitors.”

According to the Delaware Corporation, a transit tax was collected on all goods transiting the country, even those that were contraband or counterfeit. The salaries of local customs officials include a small percentage of any transit tax they collect, regardless of whether they were authentic or counterfeit products; this means that “there is a financial disincentive for thorough inspection of goods by local customs officials.”

The Delaware Corporation represented that in connection with the $25,000 dollar contribution, it would execute a formal memorandum of understanding (“MOU”) with the Ministry to “encourage the mutual exchange of information related to the trade of counterfeit products” and “establish procedures for incentive programs for local customs officials who seize counterfeit products.” The Delaware Corporation also represented that it would establish “procedural safeguards designed to assure the funds made available by the [Delaware Corporation’s] contribution were, in fact, going to local customs officials for the purposes intended.” The Delaware Corporation also represented that it would monitor the incentive program and take no part in choosing which customs officials received the incentive award.

The Delaware Corporation represented that its pending business activities in the African country were relatively small and unrelated to its request for a FCPA Opinion and further represented that its future business in the African country was not dependent upon the donation to the customs program and that the donation was not intended to influence any foreign official to obtain or retain business. Based upon these facts, the DOJ did not intend to take any enforcement action with respect to the prospective donation; however, the FCPA Opinion included two caveats. The caveats stated that the FCPA Opinion should not be deemed to endorse the language used in the MOU and the FCPA Opinion did not “apply to any monetary payments made by the [Delaware Corporation] for purposes other than those expressed in the letter of request.”

4. DOJ FCPA Review Opinion Release 09-01

The DOJ received a request by a U.S. company that designs and manufactures medical devices. In March 2009, representatives of the U.S. company visited a foreign country to meet with a senior official of a government agency (“Senior Official”). During the visit, the Senior Official explained that the government intended to “purchase the medical devices, and then subsidize the cost of those devices when it resells them to patients.” The Senior Official informed the U.S. company that all manufacturers would be allowed to participate in tenders for government purchases of the medical devices, but would only “endorse products that it ha[d] technically evaluated with favorable results.”

144 Id.
145 Id.
146 Id.
148 Id.
149 Id.
150 Id.
151 Id.
Because the foreign government was not familiar with the U.S. company’s devices, the Senior Official asked the U.S. company to provide sample devices to government health centers for testing. The U.S. company was also to provide accessories for the medical devices free of charge, as well as follow-up support; the approximate value of the devices and related items and services was about $1.9 million.

The recipients for the sample devices were to be selected from a list of candidates provided by the participating medical centers by a working group of health care professionals who were experienced with that specific type of medical device. The U.S. company’s country manager in the foreign country, who was a physician, would “participate in the working group that evaluated and selected patients to receive the donated devices;” it was also noted that the country manager had received FCPA training in January 2008 and March 2009.

To ensure fairness and transparency in the selection process, the names of the recipients would be published. Further, the close family members of the foreign government agency’s officers or employees, working group members, or employees of the health centers who would be participating in the selection process or in testing and evaluating the medical devices “will be ineligible to be recipients under the program unless (a) the government-employed relatives of such recipient hold low-level positions and are not in positions to influence either the selection or testing process; (b) the government-employed relatives of such recipient clearly meet the

---

152 Id.
153 Id.
154 Id.
155 Id.
156 Id.
requisite economic criteria; and (c) the recipient is determined to be a more suitable candidate than candidates who were not selected based on technical criteria.”

The evaluation of the donated medical devices would be based on objective criteria and the U.S. company represented that they had no reason to believe that the Senior Official, who suggested providing the devices, would personally benefit from the donation of the devices. Based upon the fact that the donation would be made directly to a government entity, and not to any specific foreign official, the DOJ opined that the FCPA did not appear to apply to the proposed donation and that it did not intend to take any enforcement action with respect to the prospective donation.

5. DOJ FCPA Review Opinion Release 10-02

The DOJ received a request by a U.S. based microfinance institution (“USMFI”) whose mission was to provide loans and basic financial services to low-income entrepreneurs. USMFI was “in the process of converting all of its local operations to commercial entities that were licensed as financial institutions, in order to permit them to attract capital and expand their services.” One of the operations was a wholly owned subsidiary in a country in Eurasia (“Eurasian Subsidiary”) that was overseen by an agency of the Eurasian country (“Regulating Agency”).

---

157 Id.
158 Id.
159 Id.
161 Id.
162 Id.
163 Id.
The Eurasian Subsidiary had been “seeking to transform itself from its status as an institution regulated by the Regulating Agency into an entity that would have permitted it to apply for regulation by the Central Bank of the Eurasian country, with the ultimate goal of acquiring a license as a bank.”\textsuperscript{164} The Regulating Agency had taken a skeptical view of such transitions, expressing concern that allowing MFIs to “transition from ‘humanitarian’ status (under which MFIs cannot distribute dividends to shareholders) to commercial status could result in grant funds and their proceeds that originally were intended for humanitarian assistance in the Eurasian country either being withdrawn from the country or being used to benefit private investors.”\textsuperscript{165}

The Regulating Agency insisted that the Eurasian Subsidiary make a grant to a local microfinance institution in an amount equal to approximately one third of the Eurasian Subsidiary’s original grant capital.\textsuperscript{166} The Regulating Agency provided a list of local MFIs in the Eurasian country and stated that the Eurasian Subsidiary could not fulfill its localization obligation unless it provided grant funding to one or more of the institutions listed.\textsuperscript{167}

USMFI was concerned that compelled grants to a specified institution, without appropriate safeguards, raised red flags under the FCPA.\textsuperscript{168} USMFI resisted the Regulating Agency’s efforts to compel it to make such grants, but the Regulating Agency rejected alternate proposals as inconsistent with its policy.\textsuperscript{169} The Regulating Agency did state that the “Eurasian

\textsuperscript{164} Id.
\textsuperscript{165} Id.
\textsuperscript{166} Id.
\textsuperscript{167} Id.
\textsuperscript{168} Id.
\textsuperscript{169} Id.
Subsidiary could engage in due diligence of the local MFIs and could impose controls on the use of grant funds.”

The Eurasian Subsidiary undertook a three-stage due diligence process to select the proposed grantee. First, “it conducted an initial screening of potential grant recipients by obtaining publicly available information and information from third-party sources.” Second, it “request[ed] and review[ed] key operating and assessment documents for each organization, as well as conducted interviews with representatives of each MFI to ask questions about each organization’s relationships with the government in order to elicit information about potential corruption risk.” Third, it “identif[ied] any ties to specific government officials, determine[d] whether the organization had faced any criminal prosecutions or investigations, and assess[ed] the organization’s reputation for integrity.” The third round of due diligence uncovered that one of the board members for the selected MFI was a sitting government official in the Eurasian country. However, the sitting government official served in a capacity that was completely unrelated to the microfinancing industry and under the law of the Eurasian country, sitting government officials may not be compensated for that type of board service. The Proposed Grant was also subject to significant controls proposed by USMFI, including staggered payment

171 Id.
172 Id.
173 Id.
174 Id.
175 Id.
176 Id.
of grant funds, ongoing monitoring and auditing, earmarked funds for capacity-building, prohibition on compensating board members, and anti-corruption policy provisions.\textsuperscript{177}

The DOJ found that the Eurasian Subsidiary’s Proposed Grant to the local MFI was for the purpose of obtaining or retaining business in the Eurasian country; that is, the proposed grant "would be made as a condition precedent to obtaining a license to operate as a financial institution."\textsuperscript{178} The real issue was whether the proposed grant would amount to the "corrupt giving of anything of value to any officials of the Eurasian country in return for obtaining or retaining business."\textsuperscript{179} The DOJ further found that based on the due diligence that was done and with the benefit of the controls that would be put into place, it was unlikely that the payment would result in the corrupt giving of anything of value to such officials.\textsuperscript{180} The DOJ also referenced FCPA Opinions 95-01, 97-02, and 06-01 in its discussion to illustrate the due diligence and controls required to avoid violating the FCPA when making a charitable contribution.\textsuperscript{181}

\textit{D. What We Have Learned}

It is instructive to look at the FCPA Opinions to see when the DOJ will take action on companies’ charitable contributions. By examining the FCPA Opinions, there are four main areas of concern for the DOJ when deciding whether or not to take enforcement action on a proposed charitable contribution. The first area of concern is if any official of the charity is affiliated with the foreign government where the payment is being made. The second area of concern is whether the payment is being made to a foreign official, or instead, is being given

\textsuperscript{177} \textit{Id.}
\textsuperscript{178} \textit{Id.}
\textsuperscript{179} \textit{Id.}
\textsuperscript{180} \textit{Id.}
\textsuperscript{181} \textit{Id.}
directly to a foreign government entity. The third area of concern is what level of control and monitoring a company plans to implement once the payment has been made. The final area of concern is whether there is a “compelled giving” law that mandates that a contribution be made to the community where the company is investing or conducting business. It is important to note that these areas of concern will often overlap.

1. No Officials of Charity Affiliated with Foreign Government

If the payment is made to a charitable organization that is not affiliated with a foreign government or foreign official, the risk of a FCPA violation is reduced. In FCPA Opinion 95-01, the U.S. based energy company certified that it had conducted an investigation and represented that “none of the persons employed by or acting, on behalf of the charitable organization or the limited liability company are affiliated with the foreign government.”\(^{182}\) However, this is not always the end of the analysis.

For example, assume you are a medical device manufacturer. You are selling medical devices in an African country. You are approached by the Director of a hospital in the African country who proposes that by donating money to the local charity that provides healthcare for low income families, he will make sure that his hospital and all other hospitals in the region will buy your company’s medical devices. You have completed due diligence and found that there are no government officials employed by the charity or serve on its board of directors. Under this set of facts, there would not be a FCPA violation, because you are donating money to a charity at the request of a private company, i.e. the hospital.\(^{183}\) However, now assume that the hospital is run by the state. Under this set of facts, there may be a violation of the FCPA. You would be donating money to a charity to influence the decision of the hospital of which products to buy; remember that there does not have to be a direct monetary benefit to the government official or employee of a SOE for a FCPA violation to occur.\textsuperscript{184} The donation is also being made to gain an improper business advantage in the African country. The Court would look at the factors including the foreign state’s characterization of the SOE, the degree of control by the foreign state, the purpose of the entity’s activities; and the extent of government ownership.\textsuperscript{185} Based upon the answers to these inquiries, the medical device manufacturer may violate the FCPA by making the donation to the charity at the request of the Director of the state-owned hospital.

---
\(^{182}\) Dep’t of Justice, FCPA Review Proc. Release 95-01, supra note 118.
\(^{183}\) This hypothetical is derived from the facts in FCPA Review Proc. Release 95-01.

It is also routine practice for companies to employ the use of consultants and agents in a foreign country.\textsuperscript{186} This can be very cost effective for companies; the consultants and agents have a good working knowledge of local customs and the local business system. However, there are also situations where companies utilize consultants and agents to make payments to foreign charities; this situation will be discussed later in the article.\textsuperscript{187}

2. Payments Made Directly to a Foreign Government

If the payments are made directly to a foreign government entity, they are outside the scope of the FCPA. In FCPA Opinion 97-02, the DOJ stated that “as the requestor’s donation will be made directly to a government entity – and not to any foreign government official – the provisions of the FCPA do not appear to apply to this prospective transaction.”\textsuperscript{188} In FCPA Opinion 06-01, the DOJ stated that “the proposed provision of 100 medical devices and related \textsuperscript{184} Although not defined within the FCPA or legislative history, the DOJ, SEC, and the Courts have interpreted “anything of value” expansively. See Baker, supra note 28, at 658-59.

\textsuperscript{185} See Carson, 2011 WL 5101701 at 5.

\textsuperscript{187} See infra § IV(B)(4).

\textsuperscript{188} Dep’t of Justice, FCPA Review Proc. Release 97-02, supra note 127.
items and services fall outside the scope of the FCPA in that the donated products will be provided to the foreign government, as opposed to individual government officials.\textsuperscript{189}

By analyzing these FCPA Opinions, it is reasonable to assume that the DOJ will not take action on donations made by companies directly to a foreign government agency. However, these FCPA Opinions are troublesome in that they seem to give companies room to circumvent the FCPA. Assume you are counsel to a U.S. mining company. The company plans to donate $50,000 for the construction of a hospital. The Director of the foreign government entity that grants mining contracts assures the U.S. company that they will receive certain mining contracts, which they would normally have had to bid on, by making the contribution. The charitable contribution is being made directly to the foreign government entity that is completing the construction of the hospital. The U.S. company is making the donation specifically to secure certain mining contracts in the foreign country. Would this contribution be a violation of the FCPA?

The U.S. mining company is making a charitable contribution to obtain mining contracts that they would have had to bid for otherwise; however, the contribution is being made directly to a foreign government entity.\textsuperscript{190} The U.S. mining company will argue that because the charitable contribution payment was made directly to a foreign government entity, and because it was properly recorded, there should be no FCPA liability. However, it can be argued that the foreign government official is still receiving a benefit, because the donations were subjectively \textsuperscript{189} Dep’t of Justice, FCPA Review Proc. Release 06-01, \textit{supra} note 135.

\textsuperscript{190} See Dep’t of Justice, FCPA Review Proc. Release 97-02, \textit{supra} note 127; see also Dep’t of Justice, FCPA Review Proc. Release 06-01, \textit{supra} note 135.
valued by the official and provided him with an intangible benefit of enhanced prestige.

Companies must be aware that even though the charitable contribution payment is being given directly to a foreign government entity, the company may still be held liable for a FCPA violation.

3. Control and Monitoring of Charitable Donations

If the company making the payment represents that there will be ongoing control and monitoring of the payment once it has been made, the DOJ appears to be less likely to take enforcement action. In FCPA Opinion 95-01, the U.S. based energy company stated it would require “audited financial reports from the U.S. charitable organization, accurately detailing the disposition of the donated funds.” In FCPA Opinions 97-02 and 06-01, the DOJ did not take action in part because there was a written agreement with the recipient of the payment restricting the use of funds. Companies must be aware that by having a strong FCPA compliance and training program and performing due diligence, they can greatly reduce the chance of a FCPA violation. This issue will be discussed in further detail later in the article.

4. “Compelled Giving” Laws

In FCPA Opinion 10-02, the requesting company was being forced by a foreign government agency to make a grant to a local institution to make sure its grant capital remained 191 See Koehler, supra note 29, at 269 (S-P Poland's bona fide charitable donations constituted a "thing of value" to the "foreign official" because the donations were subjectively valued by the official and provided him with an intangible benefit of enhanced prestige).

---

192 Dep’t of Justice, FCPA Review Proc. Release 95-01, supra note 118.

193 See Dep’t of Justice, FCPA Review Proc. Release 97-02, supra note 127; see also Dep’t of Justice, FCPA Review Proc. Release 06-01, supra note 135.

194 See infra § V(B).
in the Eurasian country. The foreign government agency also limited the entities that could receive the grant.

These “compelled giving” laws are not altogether uncommon. In Venezuelan energy service contracts with the national oil company, Petróleos de Venezuela S.A. (“PDVSA”), the law requires that the foreign company agree to invest an established percentage of the profits from each contract into the community in which it operates. The amount of the investment is negotiated with the Venezuelan government and can include cash or in-kind contributions of computers, equipment or appliances to schools, communities or organizations. Although it is legal and a practice required by law in Venezuela, these payments have generated some questions with regards to compliance with the FCPA and similar laws of other countries. While not a payment to a governmental official, it is still a payment to a governmental entity for the purpose of securing a contract. Further, it’s possible that a governmental official sits on the Board of the local charity in question. This requirement may also be present in contracts for infrastructure opportunities including communications and transportation. Other countries, including Nigeria and Angola, have laws mandating foreign companies to enter into contracts

196 Id.
198 Id.
199 While not a payment to a governmental official, it is still a payment to a governmental body for the purpose of securing a lucrative contract and, as such, requires careful consideration. See Thomas Fox, Plotting a Steady Course in Venezuelan Business, LATIN LAWYER, July 16, 2010, at 2.
200 See Dep’t of Justice, FCPA Review Proc. Release 97-02, supra note 127; see also Dep’t of Justice, FCPA Review Proc. Release 06-01, supra note 135 (In these FCPA Opinions, the payment was being made directly to a foreign government or foreign government agency).
201 See Dep’t of Justice, FCPA Review Proc. Release 97-02, supra note 127; see also Dep’t of Justice, FCPA Review Proc. Release 06-01, supra note 135 (In these FCPA Opinions, the U.S. companies requesting DOJ guidance were involved in infrastructure projects in the foreign country).
that require them to partner with local businesses in order to obtain licenses or conduct business.\textsuperscript{202} Reports from TRACE International also show that companies operating in Ukraine are routinely asked by public officials for targeted corporate charitable donations.\textsuperscript{203} To give insight on the “compelled giving” issue, Congress specifically stated that “[t]he defense that the payment was demanded on the part of a government official as a price for gaining entry into a market or to obtain a contract would not suffice since at some point the U.S. company would make a conscious decision whether or not to pay a bribe.”\textsuperscript{204}

In FCPA Opinion 10-02, the DOJ did not intend to take action because of the due diligence completed by USMFI, including research on the list of companies provided by the foreign government agency, staggering the payment of grant funds, ongoing monitoring and auditing, and anti-corruption compliance provisions.\textsuperscript{205} But what if USMFI had not undertaken such rigorous due diligence? What if USMFI had not been allowed to select from a group of local businesses, but instead was forced to donate to a local business designated by the foreign government agency? If the USMFI were then charged with violating the FCPA, could they plead the affirmative defense that the payment is required under the written laws of the foreign \textsuperscript{202} Richard Craig Smith, et al., \textit{DOJ Issues FCPA Guidance on Government-Compelled Grants}, available at http://www.fulbright.com/index.cfm?fuseaction=publications.detail&pub_id=4584&site_id=494&detail=yes.; \textit{see also} Embassy of the United States in Angola, \textit{Investment Climate Statement 2010}, http://angola.usembassy.gov/pol-econ-section/investment-climate-statement-2010.html (“In the oil and diamond sectors, contracts with the government spell out the commitments companies make to invest in infrastructure and social services to benefit local communities, such as building schools, equipping hospitals or funding microcredit programs.”).

\textsuperscript{203} TRACE International, \textit{Charitable Contributions in Kiev}, Jul. 16, 2009, available at http://traceblog.org/2009/07/16/charitable-contributions-in-kiev/ (“While the donations seem to be made transparently and to legitimate, bona fide organizations, the fact that the official initiated the request for the donation and received a personal benefit (even if not a direct, monetary benefit) clearly warrants serious FCPA scrutiny”).

\textsuperscript{204} S. Rep. No. 95-114, at 10.

\textsuperscript{205} Dep’t of Justice, FCPA Review Proc. Release 10-02, \textit{supra} note 160.
Companies should be aware of the distinction of custom and written laws, because only the latter is an affirmative defense against a FCPA claim. Any time that a government agency directs business to a specific entity – local or not - companies should be wary of the FCPA.

IV. CORPORATE SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Corporate social responsibility ("CSR") has been debated as long as corporations have existed. "For centuries legal, political, social, and economic commentators have debated corporate social responsibility ad nauseam." It is a debate of continued relevance with the rapid growth of multinational corporations. According to Merrick Dodd, a former Harvard Law School Professor, "business is permitted and encouraged by the law primarily because it is of service to the community rather than because it is a source of profit to its owners." Thus, 206 It is important to remember that this is not an exception; it must be affirmatively pled by a party charged with a FCPA violation. 15 U.S.C. § 78dd-1(c)(1).

---

207 SEC Office of Investor Education and Advocacy, "Investor Bulletin: The Foreign Corrupt Practices Act Prohibition of the Payment of Bribes to Foreign Officials," available at https://www.sec.gov/investor/alerts/fcpa.pdf ("In relying on the local law of the foreign country as an affirmative defense for a payment, gift, offer, or promise of anything of value to a foreign official, the law or regulation being relied upon, at the time of the conduct, must be ‘written.’ Local practice, custom, or other unwritten policies do not qualify as an affirmative defense.")

208 Corporate responsibility as the idea that a corporation takes responsibility for their actions concerning effects on the environment and society. See Thomas McInerney, Putting Regulation Before Responsibility: Towards Binding Norms of Corporate Social Responsibility, 40 CORNELL INT'L L.J. 171, 172 (2007) ("CSR is an umbrella term that refers to a variety of initiatives ranging from voluntary codes of conduct to programs whereby companies can undergo external audits to verify the adequacy of their practices in a variety of areas of social concern. Although generally lacking formal state power of sanction, these efforts look to international law for their normative authority, intending to apply sometimes-latent international legal prescriptions directly to corporations").

210 E. Merrick Dodd, Jr., For Whom are Corporate Managers Trustees?, 45 HARV. L. REV. 1145, 1149 (1932).
corporations do not simply exist to increase the bottom line, but to improve the general welfare of society as well.\textsuperscript{211}

However, a company’s pursuit to become a good corporate citizen can lead to unintended consequences. When does the pursuit of a CSR program expose a company to liability under the FCPA? Also, what effect does the FCPA have on a company’s decision to make charitable donations in certain parts of the world? These are questions that plague companies regardless of their size or the industry they are part of.

\textit{A. FCPA’s Effect on Charitable Contributions}

The FCPA can have a tremendous effect on the amount and recipients of charitable contributions provided by companies. In a speech on September 17, 2008, Bill Reinsch, President of the National Foreign Trade Council, opined that the SEC enforcement action against Schering-Plough Corp. and other threatened prosecutions involving bona fide charitable contributions have cast a “chilling effect” on CSR.\textsuperscript{212}

Transparency International publishes a Corruption Perceptions Index,\textsuperscript{213} which shows the perceived levels of corruption in each country. The countries are ranked in order from least perceived corrupt to most perceived corrupt. Companies should be aware of the level of corruption in the country where the charitable donation is being made.\textsuperscript{214} For example, a \textsuperscript{212} Bill Reinsch, President, Address at a National Foreign Trade Council Event, The Impact of Corruption on Global Businesses (September 17, 2008); \textit{but see} Homer Moyer, \textit{NFTC Critizes Broadening FCPA Enforcement, Lawyers Disagree}, INSIDE U.S. TRADE (Oct. 24, 2008) (opining that \textit{Schering-Plough} was not a harbinger of “super aggressive cases” to come on charitable contributions).

\textsuperscript{214} Neither the DOJ nor the SEC has advised companies to consult the Transparency CPI list before making a payment or donation in a foreign country; however, companies should still be aware of the perceived corruption in countries where they conduct business.
company making a charitable contribution in Venezuela will generally have a more onerous duty of due diligence than a company making a donation to a charitable organization in Denmark.\textsuperscript{215}

The amount of perceived corruption in a country can affect a company’s willingness to make charitable contributions in that country. For example, after the recent earthquake in Haiti, many companies were reluctant to invest in re-building Haiti because of the level of corruption present in the country. A March 2010 Wall Street Journal article quoted an American entrepreneur, who does business in the Caribbean, as saying “the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act precludes legitimate U.S. entities from entering the Haitian market. Haiti is pure pay to play.”\textsuperscript{216}

In March 2010, Tyler Cowen, the Holbert C. Harris Chair of Economics at George Mason University, suggested that the U.S. needed to pass a law mandating that the FCPA would not apply to payments or investment in Haiti.\textsuperscript{217}

These are just a few examples of how the FCPA affects companies’ charitable contributions in countries that have high levels of perceived corruption. “A 2009 Down Jones Risk Compliance survey, announced in a press release entitled ‘Confusion About Anti-Corruption Laws Leads Companies to Abandon Expansion Initiatives,’ found that 51% of companies had delayed a business initiative as a result of the FCPA and 14% had abandoned an initiative altogether. More recently, a 2011 survey by the accounting firm KPMG found that among executive surveyed in the U.S. and U.K., more than 70% agreed that ‘there are places in the world where business cannot be done without engaging in bribery and corruption,’ and that

\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{215} See Transparency International, \textit{supra} note 213 (On a scale where number 1 is the least perceived corrupt, Denmark is ranked number 1 and Venezuela is ranked 164).
\item \textsuperscript{216} Mary O’Grady, \textit{Democrats and Haiti Telecom}, WALL STREET JOURNAL (Mar. 15, 2010), \textit{available at} http://online.wsj.com/article/SB10001424052748703625304575116030721437698.html.
\end{itemize}
approximately 30% of the respondents indicated that they deal with this risk by not doing business in certain countries.\textsuperscript{218}

In the context of charitable contributions, it is also important to note that the term “foreign official” includes certain international organizations.\textsuperscript{219} The International Committee of the Red Cross, the World Health Organization (“WHO”), the United Nations (“UN”) and The Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis, and Malaria (“Global Fund”), are all organizations subject to the provisions of the FCPA.\textsuperscript{220} These are all organizations that accept charitable contributions to be used throughout the world to aid in the recovery of natural disasters or to support those who cannot support themselves. It is important to note that many foreign aid organizations have ties to foreign governments, so companies must always be aware that even if there is not a foreign official directly involved in the transaction, if the company “knows” that money will be funneled to a foreign official for an improper purpose, the company may be held liable.\textsuperscript{221}

\textit{B. Companies Using Corporate Social Responsibility to Disguise Acts of Bribery}

This article has noted that CSR is a major part of companies’ business models and CSR programs where companies contribute money and support to charitable organizations in countries throughout the world. But when does a company’s philanthropy expose it to civil or even criminal liability? This article is not meant to deter companies from donating money to charity; instead, it is meant to illustrate situations where a company could inadvertently run afoul of the FCPA when making charitable contributions and also situations where a company is using CSR to disguise acts of bribery.

\textsuperscript{221} See H.R. REP. No. 100-576 (1988) (Conf. Rep.), \textit{reprinted in} 1988 U.S.C.C.A.N. 1547 (The knowing standard, as seen from the legislative history, is very broad and does not necessarily require “actual” knowledge).

1. “Corrupt” Intent

To determine whether a charitable contribution being made by a company will violate the FCPA, the intent behind the donation must be researched. For a charitable contribution to violate the FCPA, it must be given with “corrupt” intent. The legislative history is informative on when a payment will be deemed to be given “corruptly.” The legislative history signifies that Congress viewed the term “corruptly” to connote an action that was done with a bad intent. The legislative history also indicates that “corruptly” connotes an evil motive and purpose. Congress, in a 1977 House Report, stated that the word “corruptly” in the FCPA is intended to have the same meaning as in 18 U.S.C. § 201, which is the federal statute criminalizing the bribing of a federal official.

It is important to note the distinction between a company providing charitable donations to an organization in the hope of garnering good will and a company providing charitable donations to an organization for the sole purpose of obtaining some type of business advantage.

---

222 See David P. Burns and Erin K. Sullivan, supra note 16.

223 See id.

224 See H.R. REP. NO. 100-576 (“The House receded to an amended Senate provision which would prohibit payments to any foreign official for the purpose of ‘influencing any act or decision of such foreign official in his official capacity, or inducing such foreign official to do or omit to do any act in violation of the lawful duty of such official.’ This language conforms to the domestic bribery standard found at 18 U.S.C. 201.”).

or being promised certain concessions, such as tax breaks and favorable treatment. \(^{227}\)

Companies should not be deterred from making charitable donations based upon an irrational fear of committing a FCPA violation; however, companies must be aware that if they disguise bribery as charitable giving, they could be held liable for a FCPA violation.

Companies must be aware of the bifurcated system of enforcement under the FCPA. This is especially important in the area of charitable contributions. Even though a charitable contribution may not be recognized as a “bribe,” the company may still face consequences depending on how they document the contribution in their financial records. It is also important to note that the burden of proof is much lower for an action brought by the SEC as opposed to one brought by the DOJ. \(^{228}\)

An example of this distinction can be seen in the NATCO case. \(^{229}\) In NATCO, TEST Kazakhstan, a subsidiary of NATCO, hired both expatriates and local Kazakh workers. \(^{230}\) In 2007, “Kazakh immigration prosecutors conducted audits and claimed that TEST Kazakhstan’s expatriate workers were working without proper immigration documentation. The prosecutors threatened to fine, jail or deport the workers if TEST Kazakhstan did not pay cash fines.” \(^{231}\) Even though NATCO was “paying extorted immigration fines,” the SEC brought a claim under \(^{228}\) See Miller, supra note 49 (“The court, in S.E.C. v. McNulty, 137 F.3d 732 (2d Cir. 1998), stated that the view that scienter is not a prerequisite to civil liability under 15 U.S.C.A. § 78m is supported by the fact that in 1988, Congress amended 15 U.S.C.A. § 78m(b) to provide that knowing falsification is required before ‘criminal liability shall be imposed.’”). See Stephen Clayton, Top Ten Basics of Foreign Corrupt Practices Act Compliance for the Small Legal Department, Association of Corporate Counsel, June 1, 2011 (The SEC brings cases under the record-keeping provisions of the FCPA as civil actions so its burden of proof is preponderance of the evidence).

\(^{229}\) Complaint, SEC v. NATCO Group Inc., Civil Action No. 4:10-CV-98 (S.D. Tex. Jan. 11, 2010).

\(^{230}\) Id. ¶ 5.

\(^{231}\) Id. ¶ 6.
the record-keeping provisions of the FCPA because their “system of internal accounting controls failed to ensure that [they] recorded the true purpose of the payments.”

The SEC enforcement action against Schering-Plough Corp. also illustrates how a company can violate the record-keeping provisions of the FCPA by not accurately reflecting charitable contributions in their financial records. It is important to note that S-P Poland made the charitable contributions to a bona fide charitable organization, and that it characterized the payments to the Chudow Castle Foundation as donations. However, the way the payments were structured allowed S-Poland’s oncology unit manager to exceed his authorization limits, and he admitted that he did not view the payments as charitable, but instead viewed them as dues that were required to be paid for assistance from the Director of the Silesian Health Fund.

3. Contributions to Domestic Charity Involved in Charitable Foreign Activities

Many charitable organizations in the United States are often involved in charitable projects throughout the world. Many of these charities are involved in projects in the most corrupt countries in the world. What happens to a company that makes a contribution to a domestic charity, which uses that contribution to bribe a government official? The FCPA legislative history and case law have shown that a company cannot just turn a blind eye once the transaction is finished. What then is the level of due diligence needed to avoid a FCPA violation for a donation to a domestic charity that is involved in foreign charitable activities?

---

233 Schering-Plough SEC Release, supra note 73; see infra § III(C)(2).
234 See Schering-Plough SEC Release, supra note 73.
235 See Reyes, 302 F.3d at 54; see also H.R. REP. NO. 100-576 (1988) (Conf. Rep.); see also United States v. Jacobs, 475 F.2d 270, 277-88 (2d Cir. 1973) (“The element of knowledge may be satisfied by proof that a defendant deliberately closed his eyes to what otherwise would have been obvious to him.”).
For example, assume you represent a U.S. petroleum company that has multiple projects in Mexico. The company plans to donate $50,000 to a domestic charity that provides education to rural towns throughout Mexico. On its face, this action would not seem to violate the FCPA. Even though the company does substantial business in the country, it does not seem to be making the donation “corruptly;” there does not seem to be a foreign official involved and there is no evidence that the company would obtain or retain business by making the donation.

Changing the facts of the hypothetical, you find a document showing that the company has knowledge of the domestic charity spending more funds in certain areas of the country, and consequently, certain legislative members, whose constituents are benefitted by the donations, are influencing the Mexican Energy Agency to award energy contracts to the U.S. petroleum company. This would be a violation of the FCPA. The U.S. petroleum company is being awarded energy contracts without having to engage in the normal bidding process. Certain legislative members are benefitting from having their constituents happy, and, therefore, voting for them in elections. The legislative members are also using their official authority to influence the decision making power of the Mexican Energy Agency that grants the energy contracts.

As stated above, all of these cases will revolve around the issue of intent and whether the charitable contribution is being made “corruptly.” In most cases, the intent of the contribution will be inferred from the facts surrounding the contribution and the behavior of the parties involved.236

4. Corporate Social Responsibility Used to Disguise Bribery: Hypothetical Situations

---

236 See Arthur F. Mathews, Defending SEC and DOJ FCPA Investigations and Conducting Related Corporate Internal Investigations: The Triton Energy/Indonesia SEC Consent Decree Settlements, 18 NW. J. INT’L L. & BUS. 303, 380 (“Concealment through falsification of books and records can be strong evidence from which corrupt intent can be inferred.”).
The grey area of when a donation is made “corruptly” and instances where companies use CSR to disguise acts of bribery can be illustrated by using several hypothetical situations:

Hypothetical A: You represent a U.S. electronic device manufacturer that has a subsidiary in an African country. One of the managers of the company seeks your legal advice. The African subsidiary has made several large contributions to a charity that provides clean drinking water for people in remote areas of the country. Upon investigation, you discover that the Director of the charity is the Minister of Technology. Upon further investigation, you find that the Minister is using his power to influence decisions of local electronic companies of which products to buy.

These donations will violate the FCPA. The donations are being made to a charity whose Director is a foreign official under the FCPA. The donations are also specifically being made to the charity to influence the decision making of the foreign official and to obtain additional business in the African country. This is probably the most basic and straightforward example of a company using CSR to disguise acts of bribery.

The crux of these cases will be whether the donation is being given “corruptly.” CSR is a very important part of a company’s business and just because a contribution is made to a charitable organization, does not mean that the company should be worried about committing a FCPA violation. The finding of a “corrupt” payment will be fact specific. Was the payment made to influence the decision of a foreign official? Was the payment made to the foreign official to obtain or retain business?

---

237 “Hypothetical A” is derived from the facts of the Schering-Plough case.

238 See Arthur F. Mathews, supra note 236.

239 Id.
Hypothetical B: An international company, headquartered in Delaware, has offices throughout the world, including a large office in Japan that serves some of the firm’s largest clients. Because of the recent earthquake and tsunami, the Delaware company plans to donate money to the Red Cross relief effort to re-supply Japanese citizens and re-build Japanese infrastructure.

As outside counsel to the Delaware company you are being asked to render an opinion on the legality of the donation. On its face, the donation looks permissible; however, the Red Cross is one of the international organizations designated as a “foreign official” under the FCPA.\(^{240}\) Under this set of facts, the payment raises a red flag, but after conducting due diligence, you find that the payment is being given to a bona fide charity and it is not being made “corruptly” or to gain business in Japan. The donation does not appear to violate the FCPA.

Changing the hypothetical, upon investigation, you find that an employee of the Red Cross informed the Delaware company that by increasing the amount of the donation to the relief effort, the Red Cross employee would use his position to influence the Japanese government to grant the Delaware company contracts for the re-building process. Under this revised set of facts, the donation would violate the anti-bribery provisions of the FCPA. The donation is being made to a “foreign official” under the FCPA. The donation is also being made “corruptly,” i.e. the donation is being made to influence the decision making of the Japanese government to gain building contracts.\(^{241}\) Companies must be aware that the language of the FCPA states that for a payment to violate the FCPA, it must be made to influence any act or decision by a foreign official in his official capacity or to secure any improper advantage.\(^{242}\) In this hypothetical, depending on how the Delaware company characterized the donation in its accounting records, the Delaware company could also be held liable under the record-keeping provisions of the FCPA.\textsuperscript{243}

\textit{Hypothetical C:} You represent a U.S. company that has a subsidiary in Indonesia. The CEO of the Indonesian subsidiary comes to you, as counsel for the parent, seeking advice. He tells you that the subsidiary donated a large sum of money to the UN Population Fund, which provides medical care for many Indonesians who cannot afford it otherwise, in order to be provided with certain tax breaks by the Indonesian government.\textsuperscript{244}

Under this set of facts, the donation would be a violation of the anti-bribery provisions of the FCPA. The donation is being made to the UN, which is a “foreign official” under the FCPA.\textsuperscript{245} The donation is also being made “corruptly,” i.e. the donation is being made in exchange for certain tax breaks provided by the Indonesian government. It is important to note that the business-purpose test under the FCPA is very broad.\textsuperscript{246}

\textit{Hypothetical D:} Assume you represent an international construction company, headquartered in New York (“New York Company”). The New York Company is interested in participating in the Haiti re-building effort, however, it has never conducted business in Haiti. The New York Company hires a Haitian consultant that is familiar with the local laws and customs. On its face, the mere fact of hiring the Haitian consultant is not illegal.

Changing the facts of the hypothetical, the Haitian consultant knows that by making donations to the school where the Minister of Infrastructure’s children go to school, the New \textsuperscript{243} See Jensen, 532 F.Supp.2d at 1195.

\textsuperscript{244} “Hypothetical C” is derived from the facts of the Kay case.

\textsuperscript{245} See 22 U.S.C. § 288.

\textsuperscript{246} See Kay, 359 F.3d at 755 (“business-purpose” test applies to favorable tax rulings and other favorable legislation and regulation).
York Company will be given favorable treatment and be assured of being awarded building contracts in Haiti. Under this set of facts, the New York Company could be held liable for violating the FCPA. This is a situation where the New York Company provided the consultant with money to use in acquiring business in Haiti. The New York Company cannot just turn a blind eye to the consultant and argue that they had no knowledge of such improper payments. The legislative history and case law have shown that companies cannot show a conscious disregard or deliberate ignorance of known circumstances that should reasonably alert one to high probability of FCPA violations. Because Haiti is perceived as one of the most corrupt countries in the world (Number 146 out of 178 countries), the New York Company should have been aware of the high probability of a FCPA violation by using a Haitian consultant.

Hypothetical E: Assume you represent an international tobacco company, headquartered in New York ("tobacco company"). The tobacco company has a subsidiary in Venezuela. The Venezuelan subsidiary entered into a contract with a Venezuelan charity. The agreement was signed on behalf of the charity by the charity’s Director, the wife of the then President of Venezuela. Under the terms of the agreement, the subsidiary would make periodic donations to the charity totaling approximately $12.5 million. In exchange, the subsidiary would obtain price controls on Venezuelan tobacco, elimination of controls on retail cigarette prices in 247 See H.R. REP. NO. 100-576 (1988) (Conf. Rep.), reprinted in 1988 U.S.C.C.A.N. 1547 (The knowing standard includes "[b]oth prohibited action taken with 'actual knowledge' of intended results as well as other actions that, while falling short of what the law terms 'positive knowledge,' nevertheless demonstrates evidence of a conscious disregard or deliberate ignorance of known circumstances that should reasonably alert one to high probability of violations of the [FCPA]").

249 Id.

Venezuela, tax deductions for the donations, and assurances that existing tax rates applicable to tobacco companies would not be increased.\footnote{Id.}

Under this set of facts, the donations would violate the FCPA. Even though no foreign official is directly affiliated with the charity, the wife of the President of Venezuela is the Director of the charity. The President is using his influence as a government official to grant benefits to the tobacco company, benefits which would not have been granted without the donations being made. The donations here are being made “corruptly” and to obtain business, i.e., they are being made in exchange benefits such as price controls and tax deductions.

V. MINIMIZING LIABILITY

This article has established that there are many challenges facing companies making charitable donations under the FCPA. This section discusses solutions to those challenges so that companies can minimize liability under the FCPA. It will discuss how a strong compliance program can greatly reduce the chance of a FCPA violation and the level of due diligence required to minimize liability under the FCPA for companies making charitable contributions.

A. Compliance Program

A strong FCPA and anti-corruption compliance program cannot be underestimated. When one looks at the history of FCPA prosecutions brought by both the SEC and DOJ, one observes that the first step taken by the enforcement authority is to examine what type of program a company had in place to monitor and control outside financial payments and internal accounting controls.\footnote{See Daniel J. Grimm, The Foreign Corrupt Practices Act In Merger And Acquisition Transactions: Successor Liability And Its Consequences, 7 N.Y.U. J. L. & BUS. 247, 264-66 (2010).} The SEC and DOJ have expressed concerns that the failure to implement an effective FCPA compliance program can allow “systemic cracks to form in corporate
A FCPA compliance program means “a single, documented, corporate plan designed to reduce the likelihood that the company will engage in violations of the anti-bribery provisions of the FCPA, and to detect such violations and bring them to the attention of senior management, if they occur.”

To implement an effective FCPA compliance program, several basic categories of information concerning the company must be compiled. The three kinds of basic information that need to be collected are “the risks of FCPA violations, the existing controls within the company, and the resources available to implement and monitor the program.” With this information, the company can identify the goals and objectives it wishes to accomplish through the FCPA compliance program.

Many companies have FCPA and anti-corruption compliance systems in place; however, many of these systems do not provide guidance for situations involving charitable contributions. Traditionally, this has not been an area of concern for deterring corruption. Companies must be aware that a charitable contribution may seem innocuous at first glance, but can lead to grave consequences if made illegally. Companies should continually update their compliance programs. Whenever a violation is discovered, the compliance program “should be 253 Id. at 268.

---

254 Grimm, supra note 252, at n.68 (quoting Daniel L. Goelzer, Designing an FCPA Compliance Program: Minimizing the Risks of Improper Foreign Payments, 18 NW. J. INT’L L. & BUS. 282, 282 (1998)).
255 Goelzer, supra note 254, at 294.
256 Id.
reviewed with a view to determining why the violation occurred and whether changes should be made in the program to prevent a reoccurrence.”259 Companies must also remember that a compliance “program that tries to impose controls on every conceivable activity that might result in misconduct is likely to prove unwieldy and, in the long run, unenforceable.”260

1. Proposed Model for Charitable Contributions Compliance Program

Companies need to have a section in their respective FCPA compliance program devoted specifically to charitable contributions. This article does not suggest that a company’s compliance program can be written to cover every possible situation, but it can be modified to minimize liability in the area of charitable contributions.

a. Elements

The first step a company must take is to identify charitable contributions as an area of risk in its FCPA compliance program. For example, Det Norske Veritas (DNV), an international foundation headquartered in Oslo, Norway, includes a statement in its Code of Business Conduct concerning charitable contributions. It states “[w]e shall not use charitable contributions and sponsorships as a subterfuge for bribery. Charitable contributions and sponsorships shall be documented and open for disclosure.”261 This statement is a great example of how companies can specifically include charitable contributions in their FCPA and anti-corruption compliance 259 Goelzer, supra note 254, at 291.

260 Id.
261 DNV, Code of Business Conduct, http://www.dnv.com/moreon/dnv/cr/business_ethics/code_business_conduct.asp; see also Tudor Rose, Anti-Bribery Policy, http://www.tudor-rose.com/pdf/TRI_anti-bribery_Policy.pdf (“Bribes may even be disguised as charitable donations. Again, for that reason, donations we make are approved by resolution of the Board and recorded. Whilst individuals may of course make personal donations to charity, they should not do so on behalf of the Company without prior approval from the Managing Director.”).
program. This language will also prevent employees from later stating that they were not aware of a company policy prohibiting this type of activity.\textsuperscript{262}

The second element is to stipulate designated levels of approval for charitable contributions and sponsorships and designate a compliance officer at a sufficiently high management level who is responsible for overseeing the program.\textsuperscript{263} This entails stipulating the amount of company funds that are allocated for donation to charitable organizations and also designate which employees have the power to make charitable contributions on behalf of the company and supply a list of acceptable charitable organizations that have been researched and approved. This list should be reviewed and updated frequently.

The third element is to implement a pre-donation review system.\textsuperscript{264} This system will review each proposed charitable contribution and require approval before it is made. This will allow companies the benefit of review prior to the contribution being made, rather than having to review the contribution in hindsight. The pre-donation review system should include written provisions to conduct due diligence to ensure that the proposed foreign donee is a bona fide charitable organization.\textsuperscript{265} This should include obtaining organizational documents, financial statements and tax returns, information about the organization's charitable programs, history, board of trustees and key employees, and the identity and qualifications of the individuals administering the grant.\textsuperscript{266} Companies should also not place a de minimis value on which

\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{262} See H.R. Rep. No. 100-576.
\item \textsuperscript{263} See Micheal Volkov, \textit{supra} note 257.
\item \textsuperscript{265} \textit{Id.} at 8.
\item \textsuperscript{266} The due diligence required to minimize liability under the FCPA for companies making charitable contributions is discussed in Section V(B).
\end{itemize}
contributions to review; employees could abuse the system by spreading out one large contribution into several smaller contributions that fall under the level for review. 267

The fourth element is to mandate that any sponsorship agreements are in writing and state the consideration being provided by the company. 268 The fifth element is to mandate that all records of charitable contributions and sponsorships are maintained both locally and at the main office (headquarters) of the company. 269 An original record should also be kept electronically to prevent employees from arguing that a document has been lost, misplaced, or destroyed.

The sixth element is for the company to create a database where charitable contributions are entered into an electronic database system so that they may be tracked. 270 The information stored in the database will include the branch or subsidiary of the company making the contribution, the name of the employee proposing that the charitable contribution be made, the name of the charitable organization, the location of the charity, the location where the donated funds or products will be used, and the name of the employee who approved the charitable contribution. This will make it easier for companies to monitor charitable contributions and ensure that the donated funds or products are being used for their intended purpose. It will also make it easier for companies to see the areas where charitable contributions are being made and what percentage of the company’s total promotional budget is being used. 271 This will make 267 See Schering-Plough Complaint, supra note 70, ¶ 7 (The payments were structured so that they were at or below the manager’s approval limit).

271 See Schering-Plough Complaint, supra note 82, ¶ 9 (Payments to the Foundation constituted 40% of S-Poland’s total promotional budget in 2000).
internal investigations run more smoothly, since the company will already have all the information related to a particular charitable contribution stored in one location.

The seventh element is for the company to keep a separate ledger account for charitable contributions and sponsorships in their accounting records. In combination with the electronic database, this will enable the company to have a separate record of charitable contributions being made by the company and its branches and subsidiaries.

The eighth element is for the company to prepare an annual management statement on all charitable contributions and sponsorships made by the company or on its behalf during that fiscal year. This would be in addition to the company’s annual report and whatever reports they must create by law (10-K, 10-Q, etc.).

The ninth and final element is for the company to implement a comprehensive FCPA and anti-corruption training program for all employees. Training should be given to all employees, but it is particularly important for managers and other employees who have direct decision making power. Also, as noted above, it is important for a company to engage in a review of its compliance program on no less than an annual basis. A company should determine if its overall program is effective both internally and externally. Additionally, if there are new best practices, a company should assess whether those concepts should be integrated into its FCPA and anti-corruption program. If a company moves into a new business area or a new geographic area, these new risks should be assessed, evaluated, and managed as well.

A U.S. company making charitable contributions in a foreign country should adopt a company-wide compliance and ethics program designed to prevent and address violations of the

---

272 See IFIA Compliance Rules, supra note 269.
273 Id.
274 Id.
FCPA. Companies must also include any foreign subsidiaries in a comprehensive FCPA and anti-corruption compliance program. The FCPA imposes the duty to implement internal controls directly on the parent company, allowing the SEC to hold the parent company responsible for any inadequate internal controls at a subsidiary that failed to prevent and detect improper payments by the subsidiary.\(^\text{275}\) This is very important, especially with the number of multinational corporations who have subsidiaries in different countries all throughout the world.\(^\text{276}\) As noted earlier in the article, the SEC found that Schering-Plough Corp.’s policies for detecting possible violations by its foreign subsidiaries were inadequate.\(^\text{277}\)

The U.S. government will take the existence of a FCPA and anti-corruption compliance program into account when considering whether to charge a company with FCPA violations and also the level of punishment given for any FCPA violations that are substantiated.\(^\text{278}\) However, the mere existence of a program is not enough. It’s got to have teeth and a number of solid measures as delineated above. As Joseph E. Murphy, board member at the Society of Corporate Compliance and Ethics, stated, “[c]ompliance with the FCPA is an area where faint-hearted efforts will likely fail. The [FCPA] provides ambiguous standards and sets thresholds of liability that can come as an unwelcome surprise to the uninitiated. An effective program will be one that \(^{275}\) See Schering-Plough Release, supra note 73.

\(^{276}\) James K. Jackson, Outsourcing and Insourcing Jobs in the U.S. Economy: Evidence Based on Foreign Investment Data, Congressional Research Service, available at http://www.fas.org/sgp/crs/misc/RL32461.pdf. (“By the end of 2008, there were more than 2,200 U.S. parent companies with more than 26,000 affiliates operating abroad.”).

\(^{277}\) Id.

educates and motivates the naïve, and uses aggressive management techniques to deter and ferret out willful misconduct such as bribery.”

b. Charitable Contributions Compliance Committee

The company should create a Charitable Contributions Compliance Committee (CCCC) to implement and monitor the charitable contributions section of the company’s FCPA and anti-corruption compliance program. The CCCC should be led by a representative from a company’s Law Department (Office of the General Counsel). It should be a cross-functional group of executives that ensures that all charitable contributions made through any of a company’s business units are aligned and in compliance with company policy. The members of the CCCC must be given specific training concerning charitable contributions as pertaining to the FCPA and must continually attend trainings and seminars to stay abreast of current developments in the area of charitable contributions under the FCPA. They should also meet bi-monthly to discuss implementation of compliance and ethics initiatives.

The CCCC should be granted investigatory powers. All allegations should be investigated and, on a periodic basis, a report of allegations and investigations should be provided to senior management and the Board of Directors. The CCCC’s duties should include: reporting to management on compliance matters and program effectiveness; administering a compliance training program; coordinating internal compliance monitoring activities; reviewing 282 It is imperative for a company to have a system for employees to report violations (anonymously if they wish) of company policies or other suspected illegal or unethical activity.

---

281 Id.

complaints, reports and questions received; coordinating investigations relating to compliance matters; and, where necessary, ensuring that corrective action is taken.\footnote{McKesson Corp., supra note 280.}

c. Whistleblower Protection Program

It is very important for a company to have an effective internal corporate system for reporting suspected criminal conduct and/or violations of the compliance policies, standards and procedures regarding the FCPA and other applicable anti-corruption laws for directors, officers, employees, and outside agents and business partners.\footnote{Robert W. Tarun & Peter P. Tomczak, A Proposal for a United States Department of Justice Foreign Corrupt Practices Act Leniency Policy, 47 AM. CRIM. L. REV. 153 (2010).} A company should have a strong whistle-blower program through the use of a hotline or other appropriate mechanism and a clearly stated policy of protection for any employee who reports such conduct through anonymous reporting and a clear no-retaliation policy.\footnote{Assistant Attorney General Lanny Breuer, Address at Compliance Week 2010 Annual Conference (May 26, 2010).}

Internal reporting mechanisms and whistleblower protection programs have become more important in light of the newly enacted Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act (D-F Act).\footnote{Pub. L. No. 111−203, 124 Stat. 1376 (2010).} Section 922 of the D-F Act specifies that a person who provides "original information" to the SEC of fraud within the company that leads to an enforcement penalty of $1 million or more may be entitled to collect between 10 and 30 percent of the penalties enforced. The provision also provides substantial retaliation protections for whistleblowers.\footnote{See id.} Companies should be aware of the provisions of the D-F Act and structure their FCPA compliance program to reflect these provisions. Many companies will likely have to update their FCPA compliance programs to abide by the D-F Act provisions.
B. Due Diligence

Even if a company has a strong FCPA and anti-corruption compliance program, they still must exercise due diligence when making charitable contributions. As noted above, compliance programs can minimize liability, but not erase it completely. Exercising due diligence is very important when making charitable contributions. The company must look at all the circumstances surrounding the donation being made and also research the persons involved in the transaction. The due diligence obligation is even more important for companies making contributions to charities in countries that have high levels of corruption.288

Outlined below is a roadmap for what due diligence a company should engage in before making a charitable contribution.289 The first step that must be taken by a company is to research the country where the charitable contribution is being made. As discussed earlier in the article, the company must be aware of the level of corruption in the country where the charitable contribution is being made.290 The company must also conduct due diligence to ensure that the proposed foreign donee is a bona fide charitable organization.291 This should include obtaining organizational documents, financial statements and tax returns, information about the organization's charitable programs, history, board of trustees and key employees, and the identity and qualifications of the individuals administering the contribution.

The company should also require FCPA certifications from the charitable organization.292 Before releasing any funds, the charitable organization must certify, in writing, that none of the 288 See Transparency International, supra note 213.

289 See Dep’t of Justice, FCPA Review Proc. Release 10-02, supra note 160 (listing the due diligence and controls implemented by companies in prior FCPA Opinions).
291 See Dep’t of Justice, FCPA Review Proc. Release 06-01, supra note 135.
292 See Dep’t of Justice, FCPA Review Proc. Release 95-01, supra note 118.
donated funds will be used, promised, or offered in violation of the FCPA. Because of the complexity of the FCPA and the ambiguity of when a payment will be made in violation of the FCPA, these certifications might not have the deterrent effect that was intended.

The next step for a company is to confirm that none of the charitable organization’s officers or Board members are affiliated with the foreign government. The typical situation would be a case like Schering-Plough, where a foreign official was the Director of the charitable organization. However, in most cases it will be an indirect link to a foreign official, such as a close relative or family friend, or a contribution made to an international organization recognized as a foreign official under the FCPA. There could also be cases where a high level employee of a SOE is the director of a charitable organization or on its board of directors. Therefore, as discussed earlier in the article, companies must engage in due diligence when researching a charitable organization’s link to a foreign official or foreign government.

Even if a foreign official sits on the Board of the charitable organization, it is not necessarily a de facto FCPA violation to make a charitable contribution to that organization. The company must look at whether, under that country’s laws, government officials can be compensated for that type of board service, and also whether the foreign official serves in a capacity related to the business being conducted in that country, i.e. would be able to create an improper business advantage for the company.

The next step is for a company is to require the charitable organization to provide audited financial statements that accurately reflect the disposition of the donated funds. This will allow a company to know if the donated funds are being used for their intended purpose. For example, a company might donate money to a charitable organization for building a school; however, based on audited financial reports, they might find that the money was used for a different project or was used in an illegal venture. The company could also use a written agreement, signed by the company and the charitable organization, which restricts the use of the donated funds. For example, in FCPA Opinion 97-02, the U.S. utility company used a written agreement that set forth conditions on how the donated money was to be used.\textsuperscript{295} In FCPA Opinion 06-01, the Delaware corporation executed a formal MOU that provided that the charitable organization retain five years of records of the distribution of funds and would permit inspection of those records at the request of the Delaware corporation.\textsuperscript{296}

293 Id.

By completing the necessary due diligence, companies will be in a much better position to avoid FCPA liability when making charitable contributions. Using these steps, a company can identify potential liability issues and create a manageable due diligence process. This process should be intentional, consistent, and systematic to ensure full transparency and accountability to ensure full visibility.

V. CONCLUSION

Many companies see philanthropy as an important business practice. Companies seek to be good corporate citizens by making charitable contributions and donating to social responsibility projects, such as building schools and hospitals. This is even truer for multinational companies that operate in emerging markets.

The area of charitable contributions under the FCPA is an ambiguous area of the law where liability for companies can be enormous.\textsuperscript{297} Companies must be aware that they can face \textsuperscript{295} See Dep’t of Justice, FCPA Review Proc. Release 97-02, supra note 127.

\textsuperscript{296} See Dep’t of Justice, FCPA Review Proc. Release 06-01, supra note 135.
liability under the FCPA any time they make a charitable contribution, regardless of whether the contribution is given to a charitable organization in the United States, which participates in projects in foreign countries, or given directly to a foreign charitable organization. By implementing a strong FCPA and anti-corruption program and by completing due diligence before making a charitable contribution, a company can greatly minimize its liability.