Winter November 26, 2012

Criminal Defense Advice: Why do Lawyers Defend the Guilty?

William Thies

Available at: https://works.bepress.com/william_thies/1/
Criminal Defense Advice: Why do Lawyers Defend the Guilty?

Criminal Law is not the easiest legal matter to discuss. When discussing the topic, many questions surface from concerned clients and observers of society. Interestingly, many individuals become uncomfortable with the laws that allow solicitors to defend the guilty.

The authorities establish laws that govern different provinces, merely to keep society in order. It is unfortunate that some citizens fail to respect these laws accordingly, and others simply forget the significance. Nevertheless, some law-abiding citizens respect the laws, even when the authorities modify them. The public sees justice when an attorney represents the innocent, but the majority are against lawyers defending the guilty. Why? Admittedly, the pain and suffering criminal offenders influence is unbearable for most; but everyone deserves a fair trial to determine the right punishment. It is logical that all attorneys should act on their responsibilities, exhausting all methodical opportunities that are legal to protect their clients. There’s no room for partiality, because failure to provide unbiased reasoning for your client’s misfortune is grounds for revision by law. Moreover, excellent defense does not guarantee acquittal of an impending sentence for one’s immorality; but justifies fair punishment.

Although there’s no excuse for some criminal acts, condemning the innocent is cruel. As such, giving everyone a fair court trial to prove their innocence or guilt is the optimum solution. It is sacrificial that in present day, the innocent still suffers, although the guilty receives fair judgment. This explains the stringent methods in place today. A requirement for all public defenders that specialize in criminal law and other categories is to demonstrate exemplary qualities, irrespective of the circumstance. Gradually, lawyers with poor standards get removed from the defense chamber, because honesty, morality and rationality are valuable. With the arena recognizing the criminal law attorneys with outstanding repute and respect for society, the authorities, as well as their profession, justice for the innocent prevails.

In events when the accused receives poor defense, a mistrial or appeal is the next step to consider. This is applicable to the innocent and guilty alike, because proper defense in court guarantees justice. Nevertheless, this proceeding is time-consuming, costly and overwhems the accused. Given the many disadvantages, hiring a strong-minded, proficient, criminal defense lawyer is the sensible thing to do. Since the market features several candidates who are willing to hear your complaints, it is wise to research well. Lastly, be keen on the preferred attorney by simply investigating the options exhaustively.

This content contributor has an advanced knowledge of criminal law and other legal services. Check http://beallthies.com/ to get useful updates and more tips.